NOT A VOTE IS CAST AGAINST BOND MEASURE

General Debate Closed With Measure Amended to Prevent Hampering of the Government.

PARTISAN SPIRIT IS ENTIRELY ABSENT

Washington, April 14.—The war revenue bill authorizing seven billion dollars for the national defense was passed late this afternoon by the house by an overwhelming vote.

The vote of the house was unanimous, Speaker Clark directing that his vote be recorded as aye. Representative London, New York, socialist, was the only member answering present.

An amendment was added to omit specifically distribution of the proposed three billion foreign loan which the bill would authorize to countries actually at war with Germany and only during hostilities. It was approved by Secretary McAdoo and agreed to by the framers of the bill after several members had insisted that without the limitations the secretary might make loans to European neutrals after the war ends.

The feature of the debate was the absence of partisan spirit.

Mann Stands by Wilson.

An amendment by Representative Shackleford to levy an additional income tax with a view to preventing any net income of over $50,000 annually to any person was ruled out of order on objection Democratic Leader Kitchin.

A proposal by Representative Towner, of Iowa, to eliminate the proposed $7,000,000,000 loan to the allies was eliminated also.

Speeches by Republican Leader Mann and Representatives Rainey, of Illinois; Fitzgerald, of New York, and Gardner, of Massachusetts, urging full adoption of the broad feature of the administration's plan were roundly applauded. Towner explained he did not think power should be vested in the secretary of the treasury and the president alone to manage the loan without more assistance from congress. He declared he was not opposed to the proposed loan itself. Supporters of the bill, however, saw in the result of the vote on Towner's proposal a test of their strength and they attacked it with fervid and patriotic argument.

Stirs Up Enthusiasm.

Representative Fitzgerald aroused great enthusiasm by declaring he favored making the loan at once, not because of a deesire to help another nation but to help maintain the right of the United States. Money being the only aid that this country can now give the allies, Representative Fitzgerald declared it should not be denied them.

"This proposed appropriation," said he, "is for $3,000,000,000. I doubt not that before a year that amount will be doubled. Let us hope that we can end the war by exteending our credit. Our highest duty is to give aid to those who aver fighting our enemies. I hope and

BOLIVIA'S NOTE TO GERMANY IS SHARP IN TONE

La Paz, Bolivia, April 14.—The note of the Bolivian government t othe German minister announcing the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany, denounces the attacks of German submarines on neutral vessels as violations of international law and The Hague conventions. The note recalls that the Bolivian minister to Berlin was on board the Holland-Lloyd steamer Tubantia, when that vessel was sunk in neutral waters a year ago. The note declares that German subjects and property will enjoy all liberties guaranteed by law provided that they do not commit any act of delinquency, either collectively or as individuals.

TURKS AGAIN TAKE SEVERE DEFEAT AT HANDS OF BRITISH

London, April 14.—(4:16 p. m.)—The Turks have sustained another defeat at the hands of the British in Mesopotamia. The war office announces that the Turks are in retreat after a battle in which they suffered heavy losses.

The Turks were driven from their positions near Ghaliyeh, ten miles northeast of Deltawah (Deltawah is 25 miles north of Bagdad.) They then withdrew toward Seraijik and thence toward Dely Abbas. The British are pursuing the Turks.

On Wednesday the Turks lost 200 killed and 700 wounded.

This announcement indicates that the British have wrecked the plan of the Turks to halt the invading armies, which have been sweping forward without serious interruption for several weeks. An official British statement on Tuesday said the Turks were preparing a converging movement against the British between the Adheim and Diala rivers. It is in this region that the fighting now reported occurred.

ART SMITH'S MOTHER WILL WATCH HIM FLY IN LAND OF THE MIKADO.

The above photograph was taken just a short time before Art Smith, Fort Wayne bird boy, and his mother, of this city, sailed from San Francisco for Japan. Mrs. Smith left three weeks ago to join her son in San Francisco. "Art" and his mother expect to spend a month in the Mikado's kingdom, where the Fort Wayne bird boy will complete his flying contracts at various Japanese cities.

Smith has refused to make any new engagements on account of Uncle Sam's connection with the war. At the end of his tour he will return to San Francisco and take up the work of aviation instructor for the government.

He still limps as a result of his broken leg and is at present ineligible for service in the United States aerial corps, of which he is a member.

GERMAN ARMY IN PERIL ON WEST FRONT

London, April 14.—"The British offensive has developed into a great push in the most literal sense of the word," telegraphs Reuter's correspondent at the British army headquarters in France.

"The success of the operations which began on Monday has been greater than perhaps were realized and the Germans are being pushed back from Loos to the southward.

"It takes an army a long time to get away, however skilfully the retirement may have been planned, and with a vigorous offensive clinging to its skirts in its effort to avoid defeat it may be overwhelmed.

"German garrisons scatterdd out of some villages during the night but this slipping away cannot be carried very far and when they are forced back on the line to which they may have hastily withdrawn and without their guns and stores which they were unable to get away, a decisive thing may happen."

BERLIN LEADER OF SOCIALISTS GET TEN DAYS

Amsterdam, April 14.—It is reported from Berlin that Rosa Luxemburg, formerly principal editor of the Vorwaerts and leader of the radical German socialists, who has been in prison for participation in an anti-war demonstration, has been sentenced to an additional ten days' imprisonment for abusing a policeman. Mlle. Luxemburg had been permitted to receive a friend, but the policeman cut the visit short. The prisoner is said to have denounced the officer in abusive terms and to have flung an inkwell at him. The sentence was confirmed by the Berlin court of appeals.

Rosa Luxemburg has had a stormy career for several years. She has been imprisoned several times, once in Russia. At the outbreak of the war she was under sentence of one year for making inflammatory speeches and was reported to have been shot.

FOOD CAMPAIGN IS PUSHED HARD IN WASHINGTON

Washington, April 14.—Activities of the government in furtherance of its campaign to stimulate food production in the United States during the war continued unbated today. Among these activities were. Secretary Houston conferred with leaders regarding proposed legislation authorizing the government to regulate and fix food prices, if necessary, and to license large distributing agencies.

President Wilson had under consideration a suggestion approved by Secretary Houston that he issue a proclamation calling the public's attention to the need for increased production and economy in the use of foodstuffs. In addition the department of agriculture sent out broadcast over the country copies of an appeal by Premier Lloyd-George, of England to Englishmen to plant more crops in an effort to combat the submarine peril. An accompanying statement pointed out that the appeal was peculiarly appliable to Americans and should be heeded.

MANY BAKERIES IN COLOGNE ARE SHUT ON ORDERS

Copenhagen, April 14.—A Cologne dispatch to the Berlin Tageblatt says that sixty-eight bakeries have been closed by the police for violation of food regulations. At a meeting of bakers the guild master said that a third of all the bakeries in Cologne were facing court proceedings. He declared the method of many bakers in disposing of the flour allotted to them was shameful.

COMMISSION TO THE RUSS

America Wishes to Know in What Way She Can Best Aid New Republic.

President May Designate Envoys to Pay Visit to Petrograd.

Washington, D. C., April 14.—Official confirmation that the United States is considering a commission to Russia to see in what ways this country can be of aid to the new government was given today at the state department. It was stated that while no final decision had been reached, the commission would cover all phases of Russo-American co-operation in the war. Mobilization of Russia's immense but latent resources is one of the main considerations in mind.

At the same time actual knowledge of Russia's greatest needs would make possible the most direct kind of aid from the United States. Owing to the difficulties of getting supplies into Russia through the partially icebound port of Archangel on the White sea or Vladivostok, a month's voyage across the Pacific, it will not be possi-

HAVE SHOOTER PENNED UP IN A LONG TUNNEL

Elko, Nev., April 14.—National guardsmen today were closely watching both entrances to a Western Pacific railroad tunnel to prevent the escape of the person who yesterday shot and wounded Corporal John Murphy. Murphy was shot three times in the legs while making a search for a man who was observed to slip into the entrance of the tunnel while the guard was being changed. The guardsman was accompanied by three privates. He had traveled about 200 yards when the lantern was shot from his hand. Three more shots followed, each taking effect. The tunnel, which is 2,500 feet long, is filled with crevices and it is possible the fugitive is hidden away there.

WAR ACTIVITIES ARE LIVELY IN SOUTH AMERICA

Rio Janeiro, April 14.—Great activities in military circles is reported by the newspapers. The army staff is said to be studying every phase of national defense including munition production and the protection of the ports. Rumors are current that breach of relations with Austria will probably occur soon. Telegrams from all points in Brazil report patriotic demonstrations.

The Jornal de Commerce advocates the mobilization of all rifle societies in southern Brazil.

AMERICAN CREW ABANDONS SHIP AS SHELLS COME

Washington, April 14.—The American schooner Edward Hunt of New York was abandoned by her crew under shell fire from a submarine near Cape Gata, Spain, in the Mediterranean, April 7, according to a dispatch to the state department from Consul Gassett, at Malaga.

Consul Gassett's message said: "Amreican schooner Edwin R. Hunt, of New York, Nicholas Miller, master, with crew of eight, bound from Crette to New York in ballast, shelled by submarine at 4 a. m., April 7, forty miles off Cape Gata. Ship abandoned by crew under fire, fate unknown. Crew all saved, brought to Almeria by Danish ship Konso."

BULL DOG GRIP ON THE WHOLE TEUTONIC LINE

British Continue Hammering Upon Hindenburg and Germans Are Forced to Retreat.

HAIG'S BATTLE PLANS ARE WINNING

London, April 14.—The British have taken a bull dog grip on the whole German line from Loos to north of St. Quentin and refuse to be shaken off. Under what the newspapers call the "Haig plan," first one section of the Hindenburg line and then another has been subjected to violent bombardment followed by infantry attacks which have badly shaken, if they have not seriously broken, the front of what the Germans have depended on for defense of the industrial districts of France which have been in their hands for more than two years. The Lens coal mining area around the town is being closely invested and the German hold on it is becoming most precarious. Several more villages and positions southwest of the town fell into British hands during the night, together with four 9-inch howitzers and the line here has been lined up with the positions taken from the Germans in the battle of Loos. The German stay in St. Quentin is likewise additionally threatened through the capture by the British of the village of Fayet, a bare mile northwest of the town, from which point the British guns command the German lines of communication northward. Again the British have advanced further toward

British assaults have broken four miles more of the German rfont in an important sector of the Arras battlefield.

The Hindenburg line has been riddled on its northern end. Lens is fast being hemmed in and Gen. Haig's forces are sweeping back the Germans from the Loos sector far to the southeast of Arras.

Correspondents report every indication of a continuation of the German retirement under the smashing offensive o fthe British. The Teutons are being hard pressed as they retreat and explosions and fires are observed in their rear.

Great importance is attached to the success of the British in the fighting north of Vimy. They have carried there several important positions, including points between Givench-en-Gopelle and Angers, enabling Gen. Haig to link up the ground won in the engagements early this week in the Arras region with the positions gained long ago in the costly battle of Loos. This movement is resulting in the development of Lens with its valuable coal fields.

The fall of St. Quentin also seems imminent. London reports the capture by British forces of the village of Fayet, one mile northwest of St. Quentin. The French are close to this important fortified position on the south, and Paris today announces the French guns hammering St. Quentin's defenses. Between St. Quentin and in the main battlefield of Arras, British troops continue to press forward towards Cambrai, pushing ahead north of the Bapume-Cambrai road towards Queant.

More big guns are being taken from the Germans as they retire. Last night Gen. Haig reported a total of 166 captured, with more than 13,000 prisoners in all, while today the London official report mentions four more eight-inch howitzers taken.

Letters to German newspapers indicate that the nerves of the German public are being shaken by the reverses sustained by the German arms on the western front.

Turning of Top of Hindenburg Line Achievement of Importance.

From a Staff Correspondent of the Rssociated Press, British Headquarters in France. Via London, April 14. —It is not without difficulty that one comes to a realization that semi-open warfare has replaced the old, deep trench fighting on the greater part of the British front.

It is difficult even for the fighting men actually to grasp the situation, a situation for which they have waited so long.

COST OF LIVING IN GERMANY IS ABOVE INCOMES

Copenhagen, April 14.—The results of the statistical investigation into the war cost of living in Germany, which was conducted in April, 1916, and which are now published, show that the cost of the bare necessities of life for families in the lowest wage class, materially exceeds their income. This class includes families earning from 100 to 200 marks monthly and their living expenses are put at 222 marks, 5 pfennigs. The deficit, the report remarks, has been covered by either drawing on savings or running in debt. All prices have steadily gone up in the ensuing year, increasing the impossibility of the poorly paid classes, who include persons ranked as in the educated middle classes in America, to make ends meet without public relief.

TO CHANGE NAME OF PETROGRAD TO ITS OLD STYLE

Amsterdam, April 14.—German correspondents on the Russian and Swedish frontiers report that the Russian provisional government intends to change the name of the capital back to St. Petersburg. The government is said to have decided upon this "because Petrograd recalls to every Russian the saddest times in Russian history."

OPEN TACTICS PROVE WORTH

The Germans possibly feel the change more than any one else, for above all things they love their underground comfort. The Germans were the first to transfer fighting to ditches and they are reluctantly giving up that style of warfare.

Digging in. Second Nature.

The deep concreted dugouts and tunnels along the old front were the only protection the Germans had against the ever-increasing British gun fire and every time they get an opportunity to pause no wthey immediately begin to dig in. They take to cover as if by second nature. The British have always contended that the German dugouts softened the men, who congregated in them always, and could only be kept with difficulty in the open trenches. So it was easier to break the British of the trench habit than has been the case with the Germans.

Open field tactics have been a part of the training of the new British army ever since its organization began in 1914. There has been some criticism of that system from time to time on the ground that the war would always be fought from trench to trench, but for the last few months the British army in France has been drilled in open tactics almost daily.

Value is Proved.

The results of these training methods have been apparent in the last few days and will undoubtedly prove still more valuable in the wider operations which are unquestionably coming. The losses in the recently inaugurated operations, which continue to widen with time, have been so much smaller than would be naturally expected in attacks upon such strong positions as those from which the Germans have been driven that the army authorities are feeling jubilant. Another gratifying feature of the fighting has been the speed with which the British troops have everywhere attained their objectives. Driving the Germans from positions which they had held for two years gives the army a higher fighting spirit than it ever had before.

Name of Line is Changed.

The turning of the top of the Hindenburg line, to which attention is now officially called in the communiques, has been an achievement of which the full importance has naturally not yet been developed. The Germans by the way, no longer call this line after Hindenburg but know it as the Siegfried line. The switch to that line from Queant north—which, prisoners say, is not yet finished and was not expected to be used except as a last resort—is known as the Wotan line. In the extreme south the Hindenburg line is known as the Albrecht line. The complete smashing of the Vimy ridge seems to have somewhat upset the German plan but they are evidently determined to put up the strongest possible defensive fight, before falling back again to the uncompleted positions, where dugouts are building and the protection is doubtful.

Thrilling Personal Incidents.

These days are filled with thrilling incidents of individual exploits which are difficult to sort from the mass coming in from so wide a battle front. One of the most remarkable is that of a young airman, who although shot in the eye and the leg in an air duel yesterday succeeded in bringing down the opposing machine in his own lines, dragged himself from the airplane, made a verbal report on his mission and died a few moments later.

The gaps in the German defense were made in two places. Positions on a front of three miles between the Double Crassier and Givenchy and another mile on the north flank of the Hindenburg trench system were captured. Advanced posts were pushed well toward Queant and Pronville, important points in the German defenses.

The Germans are fighting as they retire from Loos southward and are being hard pressed.

Fires and explosions in the territory to the rear of the German lines continue. The weather today was favorable for campaigning.

ble for this country to send any great mass of supplies to Russia. What is sent, therefore, must be most carefully selected. The administration wishes to do everything in its power to aid the democratizing of Russia in the common struggle against German autocracy. To that end a large Russian credit would be granted as soon as congress passes the war loan bill. It is possible that this credit would be established even before any commission goes to Russia.

Russia's Needs Pressing.

Pressing need for extending aid to Russia, particularly by sending efficiency engineers to build up railroads and other industries has been called to President Wilson's attention in a letter from Michael M. Podolsky, a distinguished Russian engineer formerly connected with the Russian government and now living in Philadelphia.

"As every one knows," Mr. Podolsky wrote, "this war is a war in which the country most highly developed in engineering and technical matters is at an advantage. It is not such a war as would have been waged one hundred years ago. Germany is astonishingly well organized to conduct such a war. Her railroad building is remarkable and she can easily concentrate large masses of troops at any given point in a very short time. But Russia, because of her lamentable lack of communication, her railroads and her insignificant mileage is virtually helpless, even though she has millions of men to call upon."

the Cambrai-St. Quentin road while southeast of Arras they are approaching Queant, which is the northern extremity of the new German line defending Cambrai.

Gen. Horne, who is considered the greatest artillery expert in the British army and who assisted Gen. Nivelle in the successful attack by the French north of Verdun in December, last commands the British forces around Lens where, owing to the natural defenses composed of waste dumps around the mines, the artillery must largely be depended upon. Gen. Horne has on his right the army under Maj. Gen. E. H. Allenby, who has also gained new laurels in this war.

These generals and their colleagues under Filed Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, have accomplished since Monday a work which many military writers expected would occupy a great part of the summer but thus far there has been no flag waving or celebration in Great Britain. The impression prevails that greater events will soon follow and that with the fall of Lens the relief of Lille will not be long delayed.

GERMAN FRONT BROKEN.

British Headqquarters in France, Via London, April 14.—(From a Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)—The British last night broke the German front for a distance of four miles. The Germans are in retreat.

CLOSING IN ON ST. QUENTIN.

London, April 14.—The village of Fayet, one mile northwest of St. Quentin, has been captured by the British after a sharp fight, according to an official statement issued by the war office.

The imporant positions of Ascension farm and Grand Priel farm east of Leverguier, were also captured.

In the direction of Vimy the British seized the Vimy station, La Chaudiere and enemy positions between Givenchy-en-Gopelle and Angres. Progress was also made north of the Bapaume-Cambrai road.

Among the guns captured by the British were four howitzers of eight inches.

ARTILLERY ENGAMEMENT.

Paris, April 14.—Artillery fighting continues with marked intensity in the Champagne, the war office announces. French patrols were active and brought back prisoners. South of St. Quentin there were heavy artillery actions.

BERLIN OFFICIAL REPORT.

Berlin, April 14.—(Via London.)—Northeast of Arras and on the river Scarpe there was a pause in the fighting activity yesterday, says the official statement issued by the headquarters staff.

On both banks of the river Somme, the German statement adds, strong enemy forces again advanced against our St. Quentin position. The attacks failed under heavy losses, the British leaving three officers and more than 200 men in our hands.

Further south at Croiselles and Bullecourt, says the announcement, the British after violent artillery fire several times vainly attacked. In a counter thrust "we inflicted considerable losses on the enemy."

pray that aid thus given will be effectual enough to end the war before we send our boys into the trenches."

No Army; Must Use Money.

Several amendments, including two by Representative Lenroot, to exclude neutrals from the loan and make its tenure the duration of the war, were accepted by the ways and means committee. Representative Madden, of Illinois, said he did not care whether $3,000,000,000 loaned the allies was paid back or not; that the United States is not prepared to send men now and the loan was the only way in which the United States could act promptly and effectively at this time. "For God's sake, let's get into action," he cried, "either through the armies now in the field or in our own army, and everybody knows we can't get an adequate army for a year. The time for talk is past and the time for action is here."

There was much opposition to a proposal by Representative Moore, of Pennsylvania, to limit the maturity of the issue. All the leaders spoke for leaving that to the discretion of the president or the treasury department.

Representative Montague, of Virginia, democrat, said he hoped that in the present eexigencies the debt of gratitude America owes to France in the days of America's weakness should not be forgotten in the days of America's strength.

CAPT. BYROADE WILL ADDRESS FRIAR CLUB

May Result in Forming of Military Unit of the Members.

At the next meeting of the Friar club to be held next Wednesday evening, Captain George Byroade will address the members on the subject of "Military Preparedness." It is thought that the talk will result in the formation of a military unit to be composed of the club members. If this is done, drill will be held regularly under Capt. Byroade.

Friardom, the monthly paper issued by the club, puts attendance at this meeting in the class of duty, not only to the club, but to the country and a strong note of patriotism runs throughout the announcement which urges members to "be there." It also emphasizes the fact that untrained "rookies" are useless when it comes to the real work and strongly favors preparedness.

The April issue of Friardom is full of announcements and post mortems. Among the latter is a story of the Friar Frolic, staged at the Palace last Thursday evening. The last social affair of the club will be a big dance at the Elks' next Friday night. The committee in charge consists of Roth Keller, chairman; Howard Gumpper, George Bailling, Dr. E. C. Singer and Carl Pierson.

WEATHER MAN OFFERS NO CONSOLING WORDS

Weather for Sunday Will Be Similar to That of a Week Ago.

Words of consolation are lacking in the weather man's prediction for Sunday's weather. No soothing words are uttered for those people who deferred Easter garding in their new gowns and suits until a week after the official day. Those who did not don their new clothes last Sunday because the weather was unsatisfactory will have no better chance this Sabbath day.

The weather man states that it is very likely the temperature will not be any higher than it was a week ago. The prediction is that it will be a fair day, a trifle improvement over last Sunday.

PEACE NEAR IS PROPHECY

BELIEVE END OF WAR FORECASTED

Count von Reventlow is Against Any Peace Without Gain.

Copenhagen, April 14.—Peace within two months and a half is predicted by the Copenhagen correspondent of the Danish Socialist Press, who confirms the reports of unofficial negotiations between Russia and German socialists as against the diplomatic denials in the socialist newspapers here and in Berlin.

The first negotiations says the correspondent, who is a socialist member of the Danish parliament, were broken off, enabling the papers to deny that they were in progress, but they were immediately resumed and are being prosecuted vigorously. The correspondent then entered into a discussion of peace terms in which he appears to take German socialist expectations and hopes for the government policy.

"I am assured from an absolutely trustworthy source," he says, "that Germany is ready to restore Belgium and Serbia, evacuate France, and with Turkey arrange an agreement with Russia over the free navigation of the Dardanelles. An agreement is also possible on the Polish question, as the Russian government knows."

The correspondent pictures England as the sole obstacle to peace.

There is reason to believe that the first part of his statement regarding negotiations between Russian and German socialists is correct, but his exposition of German peace terms conflicts with the recent highly official declaration of the North German Gazette that Germany is willing to conclude peace, but on terms compatible with the great sacrifice which she has made.

Von Reventlow Still Rages.

Count von Reventlow continues his campaign in the Tages Zeitung day in and day out, against any thought of a compromise peace which will not give to Germany in full measure what is demanded by the annexationists in both the east and the west. He expresses the hope that the renewal recently of the proposal for a peace conference by Count Czernin, the Austro-Hungarian foreign minister, which the socialists are now trying t oemphasize, has been buried definitely, saying it is undesirable to permit the western powers to have a hand in the Russo-German settlement. He intimates that Russia must reconcile herself to the loss of territories considered necessary for the future greatness of Germany, but that she may procure compensation elsewhere, probably in Rumania and Persia, which would enable her, he says, to consider honorable and advantageous terms of peace.

In another article Count von Reventlow breaks the lance with Foreign Secretary Zimmermann to whom he has transferred his old enmity against the foreign office. He asserts that it is now less than ever to the interest of Germany "to sing political serenades to the Japanese or attempt to use Carranza as a matchmaker." He warns against placing any hope in Japan. Although Germany and Japan to a certain extent are natural allies, the opportunity for an alliance has passed, he says, as Japan for the present probably will decide to maintain relations with Anglo-Saxon domination and continue to get all possible profits therefrom.

Newspaper Skeptical.

The Tageblatt, of Berlin, discussing Copenhagen dispatches relative to the presence here of Philipp Scheidmann, leader of the majority socialists, on a peace errand, mentions "a well known centerist member of the reichstag" as also taking a hand in the parleys.

The Tageblatt does not reveal his name but it probably would not be far wrong to identify him as Mathias Erzberger, leader of the clerical center, whose proclivity for dabbling in foreign affairs is well known. Furthermore the German government has been subsidizing heavily a propaganda bureau under his auspices. This bureau's function is to influence the tone of the neutral press and it is also directing propaganda in Italy and Rumania.

The Tageblatt exposes the hollowness of the denials with which the government, German socialisas and others concerned are endeavoring to shade the all too delicate plan of a separate peace effort with the Russian socialists from the light of publicity, which might perhaps wither it. The Tageblatt says the socialists who hitherto have voted regularly for the war credits may perhaps be welcomed less warmly by the Russian socialists than is hoped. It agrees with Count von Reventlow though for different reasons, in regarding the chances for success with skepticism.

TO MEET RUSSIAN ENVOYS.

Amsterdam, April 14.—A Vienna dispatch says that the Austrian parliament will be summoned to meet in the middle of May.

The German newspapers say that not only is Philip Scheidmann, leader of the majority socialists on his way to Stockholm, but that he is accompanied by three prominent German socialists, Addler, Erzberger and Haase. The four men are traveling on special passports and it is believed in Berlin socialist circles that they will meet envoys of the Russian government with whom they will proceed to Petrograd.

MAY GO IF NEEDED.

Leesburg Woman Gives Two Daughters as War Brides.

Warsaw, Ind., April 14.—Rose, the seventeen-year-old daughter of Mrs. Obesa Sutton, of Leesburg, is a bride today, her sister, Katherine, is to wed Sunday night. The mother is preparing herself for the possible shock of the announcement of a third daughter, Nellie, 19 years old, who, she fears, may decide to make it unanimous.

Rose, the youngest daughter, was married today to Audrey Monroe, 20 years old, of Leesburg.

"I'm willing to give him up if the time comes that the country must have him to fight," said the young bride-to-be this morning at the court house.

"No, I'm not a slacker," said young Monroe. "I am not doing this to keep out of war for I'll go if they have to have me."

Katherine, the eldest daughter, is to be married Sunday night to Carl Coy, of Milford. Her sister said this morning that Katherine and Mr. Coy knew nothing of the intention of herself and Mr. Monroe to get married and it was a surprise and case of "beating them to it."

Mrs. Obesa Sutton, the mother, said she still has another daughter, Nellie, whom she may have to give up soon, too.

SOUTH MILFORD PATRIOTISM.

Raising of Flag Followed by a Big Meeting.

South Milford, Ind., April 14.—South Milford has felt the thrill of patriotism and a fund was raised in the town for a flag.

This flag was swung to the breeze from a hickory pole at the southeast corner of the square, and a patriotic meeting followed in the Pythian hall.

Hundreds of men, women and children crowded the hall, filling every foot of space and scores were turned from the doors.

Valorous L. Clear, Methodist Episcopal minister, was elected president of an organization which will co-operate with the county society organized last Saturday in Lagrange, and A. B. Cookerly, teacher in the South Milford school, was elected secretary.

Mr. Clear presided over the meeting. Charles L. DeBow, Methodist Episcopal pastor in Lagrange, and Frank J. Dunten were the orators of the evening and what they said was heard with enthusiasm.

Roanoke, Ind., April 14.—Marvin Richards will retire from the hardware firm of M. W. & N. D. E. Richards will head the hardware firm. The sons are Ansel and Ned, who have grown up with the store and are not strangers to the business. The store was started a quarter of a century ago and is one of the well established institutions of Roanoke.

SHOT IN BATTLE.

Decatur, Ind., April 14.—Clinton Kerr, son of Robert Kerr, of near Monroe, is the first American man to be reported among the wounded in the great world war. The story of his enlistment with a Canadian company New Year's day, 1916, was told a few days ago when it was also said that since January of this year he had been with the French troops, presumably taking part in the great battle of Arras, still in progress. Mr. Kerr, the father, has just received a telegram from Ottawa, Canada, stating that Clinton had been wounded on March 27th, when he was shot in the thigh. No further information was given and it is not even known just where he was taken. More news is anxiously expected by the parents and friends. Clinton was serving as flag sergeant at last reports.

SAID TO BE AT HOME.

Geneva, Ind., April 14.—A report published by the Kansas City Star concerning Mrs. Thurman Huey and B. F. Bowsman, who eloped from Geneva a few weeks ago, is denied by the woman's husband, who went to Kansas City after her. The Kansas City paper's report was to the effect that the court at Kansas City fined Bowsman and Mrs. Huey $200 each, after Mrs. Huey refused to return with her husband and expressed a preference to go to jail with Bowsman. According to Huey, his wife did not go to jail and returned home with him, and he reported also that Bowsman was not jailed and has returned.

Kendallville, Ind., April 14.—Mrs. O. J. Bearss, aged about seventy, a former resident here, and a daughter of the late Captain Hiram Iddings, died very suddenly at her home in Peru. Word of her demise was received here in a message by Eugene Iddings, a cousin, who departed for Peru Friday to atten dthe obsequies which will be conducted Saturday. Mrs. Bearss was a native of Kendallville, being born and reared in this city. In early life she was united in marriage to O. J. Bearss and for a number of years has been residing in Peru. Surviving beside her husband are two daughters, Mrs. Louis Andrews and Mrs. Charles Griswold, both of Peru. Mrs. Bearss will be remembered here by many of the older residents of the city.

LOOK FOR STICKER.

City Sealer Tolan Is Placing O. K. Labels on Pumps.

City Sealer C. B. Tolan will start out Monday morning to make a thorough test of gasoline pumps in Fort Wayne. He will carry a package of stickers and on each pump which he finds to be O. K. he will place one of the paper stamps. The label tells that the pump has been tested according to standard measures of Indiana and has been found to be accurate.

Tolan is making the test now because the automobile season is about to open in earnest. As a protection to auto drivers he suggests "look for the seal" when you purchase gas oline.

Test of the tanks about the city were made a few weeks ago by the city sealer and experts from the Wayne and Bowser Pump works. While all pumps were adjusted at that time to give accurate measurement the delicate devices sometimes get out of order in a short time and Tolan expects to make several tests of the filling stations during the year.

NATION'S FOOD CROPS MUST BE INCREASED

War Demands and World Food Shortage Should be Met by American Farmers —Efficient Production Imperative to Promote National Welfare—What Crops Should be Stressed and Where.

By DAVID FRANKLIN HOUSTON, Secretary of Agriculture.

Washington, D. C., April 14—The secretary of agriculture, D. F. Houston, today has issued the following statement:

"The importance to the nation of a generously adequate food supply for the coming year cannot be overemphasized in view of the economic problems which may arise as a result of the entrance of the United States into the war. Every effort should be made to produce more crops than are needed for our own requirements. Many millions of people across the seas, as well as our own people, must rely in large part upon the products of our fields and ranges. This situation will continue to exist even though hostilities should end unexpectedly soon, since European production cannot be restored immediately to its normal basis. Recognition of the fact that the world at large, as well as our own consumers, must rely more strongly on American farmers this year than ever before should encourage them to strive to the utmost to meet these urgent needs.

Increase Yields of Staple Crops.

"It is obvious that the greatest and most important service that is required of our agriculture under existing conditions is an enlarged production of the staple food crops. Because of the shortage of such crops practically throughout the world there is no risk in the near future of excessive production such as sometimes has resulted in unremunerative prices to producers. This is particularly true of the cereals and of peas, beans, cow peas, soy beans and buckwheat. In view of the world scarcity of food, there is hardly a possibility that the production of these crops by the farmers of the United States can be too great this year, and there is abundant reason to expect generous price returns for all available surplus.

"The most effective step that may be taken to increase the production of these crops is to enlarge the acreage devoted to them in the regions where they are grown habitually. This expansion of acreage should be to the limit permitted by available good seed, labor and equipment. The placing of too great emphasis on production in new regions is inadvisable since the introduction into a farm operation of a crop not usually grown frequently involves practical difficulties not easily foreseen nor quickly surmountable.

"Taking the winter wheat territory as a whole, winter killing has occurred to an extent very much greater than usual. This, obviously, if not compensated for in some way, will mean a material reduction in the supplies of our most important bread cereal. Where winter wheat has been damaged sufficiently to justify the abandonment of fields, it should by all means be replaced by spring-planted food crops, preferably small grains or corn. The acreage of winter wheat seeded last fall is estimated at 40,080,000, or only 2 per cent above that of the preceding year (39,203,000 acres), and about one-eighth more than the average for the preceding five-year period (35,724,000). The condition of this crop, as shown by the department in its report of April 7, is more than 25 per cent below the average condition April 1 for the past ten years. This condition forecasts a production this year nearly 52,000,000 bushels less than that of 1916 and 243,000,000 bushels less than the crop of 1915.

"Climatic requirements of spring wheat during the last few weeks of its growth render it a more risky crop than others to plant outside the areas in which its production has been proved to be successful, so that it is not recommended for regions where oats or corn will be more certain to produce satisfactory yields. In the northern spring wheat states, however, where old ground has been reserved for flax and seed wheat is available, flax ground may well be sown with spring wheat and new land broken for flax where such land is available. In the Pacific northwest, where the seed supply of well adapted varieties is adequate, a considerably increased acreage of spring wheat appears probable. The spring wheat acreage of 1916 (17,956,000 acres) was more than 5 per cent less than that of 1915 (19,161,000 acres), and more than 4 per cent less than the preceding five-year average (18,799,000 acres).

Good Seed Wheat Necessary.

"The minimum quality of seed grain that should be relied upon under existing conditions is a very difficult point to decide. In general, it is not wise to risk planting seed wheat showing less than 75 or 80 per cent germination, nor that weighing less than fifty pounds to the bushel. If the land is prepared thoroughly and otherwise is suitable, the use of spring wheat weighing as low as forty-five pounds per bushel, if it shows good germination, may be advisable where better seed is lacking.

Usefulness of Oats and Barley.

"If land intended for spring wheat cannot be put into good condition early enough for seeding, oats or barley can be substituted to good advantage in the sections where these crops are known to do well. Barley can be relied on in the proved areas of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, the Dakotas and Montana, while oats have a much wider range. The case with which barley may be substituted directly for wheat in human food and its usefulness to replace wheat milling by-products as food in the production of the milk supply, renders its abundant production important. Barley, where it succeeds, yields a larger weight of feed per acre than any other small grain crop. With an abundance of oats and barley available, much closer milling of wheat than at present could be practiced, if necessary, without endangering the milk supply which constitutes so important an element in the dietary of consumers.

Large Acreage of Rye Planted.

"The place of rye under present conditions is an important one. The crop this year should be harvested and utilized with more than the usual care. Considerable acreage is planted in some sections for plowing under in the spring for green manure. Where conditions are suitable part of this acreage might well be held for harvesting, and followed with a suitable summer or fall crop for plowing in later.

Buckwheat for Late Planting.

"Buckwheat may be planted later than any similar crop, and often does well on old meadows or waste land that can be broken after the more exacting crops are planted. In some sections where experience has demonstrated that the cereals, except rye, cannot be relied on, buckwheat is a crop of considerable importance. The acreage could well be increased, especially in portions of New York, Pennsylvania and New England, where the crop now is grown to a considerable extent.

Rice Gaining in Popularity.

"Rice at present prices provides more food value for the money than most of the other cereals. Fuller appreciation of its value should stimulate production quickly in Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and California to an extent that would increase the total food supply greatly.

Increased Acreage of Grain Sorghums Warranted.

"The prices of the grain sorghums during the past season appear to warrant increase of acreage of these grains in the regions where they can succeed, as in western Kansas, Oklahoma and northern Texas. This increase should be practically to the limit of the acreage that can be handled properly with the labor and facilities available. Grain sorghum may well be used in that area to replace winter wheat on fields abandoned because of winter injury. The grain sorghums are but little known to eastern farmers, but are assuming importance rapidly in the drier portions of the country where corn and the small grains are unreliable because of frequent insufficiency of moisture. In the past these grains have been used chiefly as poultry and stock feed, but they have possibilities also as human food.

Flax for New Ground.

"Though flax is not primarily a food crop, the cake remaining when oil is expressed from the seed constitutes an important element in the dairy food supply. Its increased use in this way would release other grain products for use as food. As a crop peculiarly adapted to newly broken land in the spring wheat states where it is chiefly grown, the acreage of flax should be increased to the greatest extent possible.

Expand the Corn Acreage.

"Corn is the leading food and feed crop of the United States in geographic range of production, acreage and quantity of product. The vital importance of a large acreage of this crop properly cared for, therefore, is obvious. Because of the prices obtained for the last crop and the world demand for this grain, its profitableness to the American farmer during the approaching season is clear. The 105,954,000 acres planted to corn in 1916 yielded 2,583,000,000 bushels or more than 400,000,000 bushels less than the large crop of 1915—2,994,793,000 bushels—and considerably less than the five-year average—2,732,457,000 bushels. Conditions now warrant the planting of the largest acreage of this crop which it is possible to handle effectively.

"Although fall is the proper time for breaking sod for corn, there are many unproductive and foul meadows and indifferent pastures in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and the middle Atlantic and northeastern states that, under existing conditions can be broken now to advantage and planted to corn. The resulting reduction of hay and pasture would be more than replaced by the corn stover, ensilage and grain produced. Corn as a cultivated crop has been found well suited to replace summer fallowing in portions of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Wyoming and Montana, the forage and grain produced not materially reducing the succeeding grain crop.

Plant Early and Reduce Risk.

"Earliness of maturity, other factors being equal, is advantageous in the case of practically all grain crops. Relatively early maturing varieties should be selected where possible, and the planting should be done at the earliest suitable date. With the small grains an advance of three or four days in stage of maturity frequently saves a crop from serious damage by rusts. With corn a similar advantage is obtained by early maturity when severe droughts are encountered and when killing frosts occur toward the end of the season. Corn grown on the rich bottoms which constitute the best corn lands often is damaged by temporary overflow. If corn has an early start, however, it usually will attain a size which will make it possible to withstand overflows with less damage. Early plantings of corn if somewhat damaged by flood or frost, can be replanted even a second or third time with profit, if seed of early-maturing varieties is secured in advance of the time when needed.

Cow Peas and Soy Beans Valuable Food.

"The usefulness of cow peas and soy beans as human food has been recognized only recently in this country. Existing conditions warrant the planting of all the available seed of varieties known to do well in the several sections. The soy bean, in particular, has proved sufficiently resistant to cold in spring and to adverse weather during summer to warrant heavy planting, especially throughout the south.

"The value of the beans for oil production, as well as for human food, has become recognized so quickly and so generally during the past year that the crop has acquired a commercial standing far in excess of its previous status. While the commercial supply of seed late in March was estimated not to exceed 500,000 bushels, the quantity available on farms, where home-grown seed is held over in small lots for planting, undoubtedly will make possible a largely increased acreage.

Field Bean Prices Should Stimulate Production.

"The high food value of field beans and the shortage of supply due to the light yields of 1915 and 1916 render them of great importance in the regions to which they are adapted. This is especially the case in portions of the New England states, New York, Michigan and California, where the chief supply has been grown for many years, and in sections of Idaho, Colorado, New Mexico and other western states where beans have attained importance recently. The seed supply, while high in price, is well distributed. In order that especially good crops may result, beans should be planted under such conditions of soil as regards character and preparation as will insure efficient use of the seed supply.

Reserve Sufficient Hay, Forage and Pasture Land.

"A deficiency of hay and forage for the next winter would jeopardize the future meat and dairy supplies of the country and result in a shortage of roughage for military draft and saddle animals. In regions where dairying dominates, the full acreage of clover, alfalfa, and the grasses that is in productive condition should be maintained. Under the conditions prevailing in most dairying sections these crops can be carried with less man power than that required for tilled crops. The older, thinner and less productive grass lands, however, frequently can be made to produce much larger yields of feed in corn than if left as they are in unproductive grass. The seeding down of small grain fields for next year's mowing should by no means be neglected, for the maintenance of effective rotations of crops will be found as important in the future as in the past.

"For the gulf states perhaps no forage crop of which the available seed supply is relatively abundant exceeds the velvet bean in potential value. This legume possesses also the ability to make a crop when planted relatively late.

Potatoes and Vegetables.

"Seed potatoes should be conserved by planting on the best lands available for them and planning for thorough tillage and protection of the crop against disease and insect pests. Potatoes can be grown most advantageously near the centers of population in the northern states where transportation cost may be reduced to a minimum. This crop is capable of quick and large increase of production when conditions are favorable. There is, however, considerable risk of unprofitable production of potatoes when they are grown at long distances from the consuming markets, owing to their disproportionate weight and bulk of the product in comparison with the cereals.

"Such vegetable crops as carrots, rutabaga, turnips, onions and cabbage are worthy of much more attention than they generally receive, especially in the eastern United States. All these crops are capable of large production on suitable land under intensive culture throughout the more densely populated portions of the country. The supply of seed is ample and their culture relatively simple. The holding of these vegetables for the winter food supply is relatively easy where suitable inexpensive pits, cellars or lofts are prepared in time. The practicability of quickly drying vegetables for longer preservation was demonstrated on large scale last lear in western New York, where quantities were dried in the available apple evaporators and in quickly constructed dry kilns for export as army supplies. This was a repetition of the experience of the civil war period, when desiccated vegetables assumed considerable importance in the army ration and the equipment required for their preparation proved the forerunner of our present fruit drying equipment. Existing conditions warrant heavier planting than usual of staple winter vegetables in the sections where canneries and fruit evaporators exist and probably in some sections where the provision of such facilities later in the season may be justified.

"In the southern half of the country perhaps no crop has larger possibilities for quick increase of production of food for both men and animals than the sweet potato. Methods of handling and storing this product demonstrated and advocated by the department workers for several years make possible much fuller utilization of this crop than has occurred generally in the past.

"The peanut in many sections of the south also is capable of greatly enlarged production with little risk of over-supply, as it is in demand for oil and peanut butter manufacture as well as for direct use as food both for man and hogs.

Hold Seed for Replanting.

"While early planting is desirable, it is rarely advisable to risk the entire supply of seed in the first planting. This is particularly important with the tender, tilled crops, including corn, sorghum, beans, cow peas and soy beans. It is well to hold a fair proportion of seed in reserve against possible need, due to untimely frost or other destructive weather, at least until after the recognized danger period is passed. The availability of seed for immediate use when the need occurs frequently determines the practicability of replanting effectively. This is true also of reserve stocks of plants of tomatoes, sweet potatoes, early cabbage and other vegetables usually transplanted.

Possible Sweets for Domestic Production.

"Only about 20 per cent of the supply of sugar normally consumed in the United States is produced domestically, and this amount cannot be increased appreciably during the coming season. Unless normal imports of sugar reach our shores, therefore, a shortage of this food is inevitable. Supplemental sweets, however, may be produced more abundantly than in normal years and to some extent may take the place of sugar for the home use of farmers. Sirups from cane and sorghum constitute one of the most important groups of supplemental sweets. Wherever these crops can be grown farmers may find it to their advantage to plant acreage sufficient to furnish materials for the home manufacture of at least a sufficient supply of syrup to meet family needs. In many parts of the country honey production may be increased by closer attention to bee culture.

Increase Farm Production of Vegetables, Poultry and Dairy Products.

"The high prices for foodstuffs that have prevailed during the last few months have stimulated interest in the increase of home supplies of vegetables, poultry and dairy products on farms. This interest has been quickened most noticeably in the south, where for several years this department and the states through their extension workers have urged such an increase as necessary for economic reasons even under normal conditions. Other parts of the country have responded to these appeals, but emphasis on this feature should be continued by all agencies in position to operate effectively.

"Through increased attention to poultry on farms it is possible to add quickly and materially to the food supply. Because of the importance of an increased supply of eggs, under present exigencies, farmers should not market hens of the egg breeds, such as the Leghorns, which are less than three years old, or of the larger breeds which are less than two years old. By the immediate preservation of eggs for home consumption through the use of water glass or limewater, larger supplies of fresh eggs may be made available for marketing later in the season, when production is less and prices higher. Every person who raises chickens, from the novice to the poultry husbandman, should see that infertile eggs are produced and all surplus marketed promptly so as to eliminate waste through spoilage.

Increase Production Off the Farms.

"When conditions render it feasible small flocks of poultry should be kept by families in villages, towns and especially in the suburbs of large cities. The need for this extension of poultry raising is particularly great where consumption exceeds production, as in the northeastern states. Through utilization of table waste, scraps and other refuse as poultry feed, much wholesome food in the form of eggs and poultry for home use may be produced at relatively low cost. Many families in villages and on the outskirts of cities also should consider the advisability of keeping a pig if sanitary regulations permit. In most cases, however, it will be profitable to keep a pig only when a sufficient surplus from the household and the garden is available to furnish a considerable portion of the pigs' food.

"Consumers living in villages and in the suburbs of cities do not appreciate sufficiently the possibility of adding materially to their food supply by utilizing suitable idle soil in yards, vacant lots and unused outlying fields. The total contribution to the food supply of families and communities which can be brought about through such activities is great. Gardening is peculiarly an activity in which the family and the community may share with resultant mutual helpfulness and benefit.

"The duty of the individual farmer at this time is to increase his production, particularly of food crops. If he has control of tillable land not in use, or money lying idle, or labor unemployed, he should extend his operations so as to employ those resources to the fullest extent. This does not mean that he should rob his land, waste his capital, or expend his labor fruitlessly, but that by wise planning and earnest effort he should turn out a greater quantity of food crops than ever before. He will not lose by it, and he will perform an important service in supporting his country in the task that lies before it. The agricultural sufficiency of a nation is not attained unless as the units which compose it are efficient. Those agricultural workers who produce, conserve and market wisely will help toward the achievement of national agricultural sufficiency, and thus will perform valuable service for the nation."

DAILY BIBLE READINGS FOR THE HOME

Matt. 18:7-14.

7 Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!
8 Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire.
9 And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire.
10 Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven.
11 For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost.
12 How think ye? if a man have a hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray?
13 And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not astray.
14 Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.

Sunday, April 15—Luke 15:1-10.

1 Then drew near unto him all the publicans and sinners for to hear him.
2 And the Pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them.
3 And he spake this parable unto them, saying,
4 What man of you, having a hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?
5 And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing.
6 And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, saying unto them, Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep which was lost.
7 I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance.
8 Either what woman having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it?
9 And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost.
10 Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.

Vol. LXXXIV ..... No. 184

SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1917.

Will Go Farther Than the War.

The mobilization of America's food resources, now setting in with strong tide, will go farther than any mere expedient of war. That will be one of the best consequences of it. We have been growing too little food in this country. We have been wasting too much food. We have been permitting ourselves to drift along on increasing currents of extravagance. We have been counting our money—and spending it—with no thought for the future. Meanwhile there has been an unremitting tendency of the cost of living to rise.

War is opening the eyes and stirring the intelligence of the countr yto actualities. If we are to fight and not get licked we have got to feed our fighters—and our fighters, as in this case it falls out, are not all of them Americans, not any of them as yet Americans. We have got to feed to a large extent practically all the world with which we fight. During the past year we have had scarcely enough with which to feed ourselves. It is easy and smug to lay the charge of this to shortage of crops—wheat and potatoes, corn and cabbage. But we know somewhat better than that. The stringencies we now find ourselves up against in the matter of foodstuffs and the prices we are now paying for what we consume marshal the proofs that we have been negligent, unthinking, thankless. Half the land we have that is tillable lies untilled. Such land as is worked we permit ourselves the guiltiness of producing too little. Of a large part of what we gather we make a vast and sinful waste.

War is going to grind the edge of our necessities to a sharper edge. If the conflict in which we now have a part shall be prolonged we shall know something of what Germany and France and Great Britain—all countries that have had in common with us the possession of great wealth—have gone through, are going through and have yet to go through. Out of this war we shall come with some chastening of spirit, some uplifting of ideals, some understanding sense of the immutable laws of morals and economy that in our blindness of pride we have sought to revoke or suspend for the better ease of our own case.

National security now is prodding and spurring us to knowledge of the worst of our flagrancies, the besetting sins of our preventable and happily still remediable weaknesses. We shall come through—albeit it turns out now to be no soft task to get ourselves awake and wholly accountable. The war will leave us poorer but better, sadder but wiser than when it came suddenly and unbidden upon us. As a cost even of billions and perhaps some hard-levied tribute of blood it will not have been a price out of reason if it shall teach us the greater of some of the things we are in pitiable need to know.

Whether it shall be the policy of the government to confiscate or to pay for the German merchant vessels seized at the outbreak of war, they will be a great convenience and a vast start toward the development of the American merchant marine. The damaged machinery can be repaired in a few months or a year and no vessel like for instance the Vaterland could be slipped from the ways for several years. We shall be looking up right smart on the seas before long.

Congress appears to be entirely ready to provide seven billions of money to finance the war. Congress should also be as ready to provide a military system that will make unnecessary a wanton waste of a great part of the seven billions.

Seven billions for the first year of the war ought to be given some standing as a guarantee of good faith.

WAR AND CHILD MORALITY.

(Review of the World.)

The United Board of Sunday School sof England has been making a study of the effects of the war upon child life. It was learned that juvenile delinquency in London has increased 40 per cent. "The war has created an excitement in the minds of the children," says Cecil M. Chapman, the metropolitan magistrate. Sir Edward Troup, of the home office, has issued a circular to the magistrates in which he states that he "has under consideration representations respecting the recent increase in the number of offenses by children and young persons under sixteen years of age."

"Punishable offenses have grown in seventeen of the largest towns of England about 40 per cent.," and he adds, "the increase of nearly 50 per cent. in cases of larceny, but there are also more charges of assault, malicious damage, gaming and offenses against the educational acts." The causes for this "loss of discipline," which is widely commented upon, are the absence of fathers who are in the army; depreciation of the school influence on account of shortage of teachers and keeping school only part time; the leaving of school for work at an earlier age, there being now from one hundred and fifty to two hundred thousand children between the ages of eleven and thirteen released from school to do wartime work; a low type of patriotism based upon force and self-interest and not upon love, with which the children are made too familiar.

Mr. Worden is a staunch young democrat and will probably be the next joint senator from Allen and Whitley counties. He is a pronounced Cleveland man and says that there is practically but one sentiment on the presidential question among the democrats of northern Indiana."

JOHN A. LAPP,
Director of the Indiana Bureau of Legislative Information.

HISTORY OF INDIANA'S CONSTITUTION.

(Copyright 1917 by John A. Lapp.)

The procedure in admitting a new state to the Union has been to pass an enabling act by congress which autnorizes the people of a given territory to form a constitution and when the constitution is formed to admit the territory by act of congress into the Union.

In 1815 congress passed an enabling act authorizing the territory of Indiana to frame a new constitution and thus to get ready to join the Union as one of the states. The people of the territory sent delegates to a convention which met at Corydon, June 10, 1816, and framed the first constitution. The convention was in session only twenty days. The constitution was approved by congress and Indiana was admitted to the Union. The people's part in framing the first constitution consisted merely in electing delegates to the convention. They did not vote upon the adoption of the constitution.

The new constitution was not an original document, but was copied largely from the constitutions of the United States, and of Kentucky and Ohio. That a state constitution could be worked out in twenty days indicated that it was mostly copied from other sources.

Almost from the time the first constitution was adopted proposals for a new constitution were heard. The people voted several times on the question of calling a convention and finally in 1849, by an overwhelming vote, approved the plan and the second convention composed of delegates elected by the people, met in Indianapolis Oct. 7, 1850. This convention contained many able men, among whom may be mentioned Robert Dale Owen, Schuyler Colfax, John Petit, George W. Carr, the president of the convention, Alvin P. Hovey, James Lockhart, Thomas Walpole, Horace P. Biddie and Michael P. Bright. Mr. William H. English was the principal secretary of the convention.

The work of framing a new constitution was completed in 126 days and the people approved the new document by a vote of 113,230 to 27,638.

Since 1852 only eight changes have been made in the constitution. One was adopted in 1873 relating to the Wabash and Erie canal bonds and seven were adopted in 1881. During these years over four hundred and eighty-five amendments were proposed by the legislature but owing to the extreme difficulty of amendment not one was adopted.

After many futile efforts to get proposed amendments through two general assemblies and then to secure a majority of all the voters at the election (not a majority voting on the question) an effort was made by Governor Marshall in 1911, for a short cut to a new constitution by having the legislature submit a revision directly to the people. The state supreme court declared the method unconstitutional and we were left without recourse except by calling a convention. In 1913 the legislature submitted the question to the people, "Shall a constitutional convention be called in 1915" and the people voted "No."

But the need was so apparent to every thinking person that the adverse vote did not deter the legislature of 1917 from calling a convention without submitting the question to a vote. Close observers have expressed the opinion that if it had been submitted, it would be carried by an overwhelming vote so generally has the necessity come to be recognized.

The call for the convention directs that an election be held on the 18th of September, 1917, at which time one hundred and fifteen delegates shall be elected. Fifteen of these delegates are to be elected by the whole state and one hundred by the representative districts, each district electing as many as it now elects as representatives in the general assembly.

There can be no party nominations or party emblems in the election. Delegates are nominated by petition only. The petition of the district delegates must contain 200 signatures and of the delegates at large 50 from each of the 13 congressional districts or 650 in all. These petitions must be filed in the office of the secretary of state between July 20th and August 19th, 1917.

The judge of the circuit court appoints the election officials consisting of one inspector and two clerks in each precinct at least ten days before the election. In other respects the provisions relating to general elections apply. The names will be rotated on the ballot so that each will appear at the top an equal number of times thus preventing any candidate from having advantage of the top position.

Every male voter of the state may vote at this election and every woman who is a citizen of the state and having the qualification of residence required of a voter, may vote. All persons must be registered in order to vote and the registration board will be in session at the court house in every county seat at least between June 21st and August 20th. The registration boards are the same as at a general election which under the new law consist of the clerk of the circuit court and two persons appointed by him upon the nomination of the two leading political parties. This board appoints the clerk of registration and a deputy clerk of registration and other necessary assistants who are on duty at the office of the board on all working days. Any person may register in person at the office by filling out a blank answering a number of questions or he may fill in the blank, swear to it and send it to the board. Blanks will be furnished from the office of the board.

At the election, women vote the same as men, but the ballots are put in separate boxes and counted separately. It appears that this was done as a precaution so that if by chance the act granting women the right to vote should be declared void the women's vote could be separated and the result of the men's vote be determined separately. When a voting machine is used it will be necessary to have separate machines for the women or else a ballot box for the women's vote in which case the men could vote by machine and the women by paper ballots.

The result of the election for the state and for each district will be certified to the secretary of state and the fifteen delegates at large who receive the highest number of votes in the state and the candidates in each district who receive the largest number of votes will be declared elected.

The elected delegates will assemble in the capitol, January 14th, 1918, and proceed to organize by the election of the necessary officers and assistants. The convention will pass rules for its procedure, appoint committees and conduct its business in much the same form as a legislative body, but with far greater deliberation. All of their acts will be submitted to the people for their ratification or rejection. Thus the people have the final say. The convention may submit the questions together or separately but if it decides to submit a question at all, forty-five delegates may require that that question shall be submitted separately. The advantage of separate submission is that each question may be decided on its merits and the people will not have to take all or reject all.

When the convention has completed its work, the members determine how and when the questions shall be submitted to the people. They may decide in favor of a special election or they may decide upon the date of the regular election as the time for submission. Opinion seems to favor the special election because the people can then pass upon the question and avoid the turmoil of the regular election.

A. C. W. NOTES

For the Week.

If you are a committee chairman, in your society, of devotional, missionary, social, lookout and good-citizenship work you are a member and will have a voice in the A. C. W. general committee meeting at the Third Presbyterian church at 7:45 on Thursday evening. Do you realize that you are a salesman? All salesmen are not on a par, and if you are the means of giving a suggestion to your brother salesman it will help and you may get an idea that will be welcome to your society. Have you found a best method for your committee? How many sales of Christ's love have you made since last Saturday?

For the Future.

On the national recruiting day, which has been set for April 18, the slogan will be "Wake Up America!" We also understand that nation-wide prohibition will be asked for. This will meet with the approval of millions of our peeople and will go down through the ages as one of the greatest events for rejoicing that the people under the Stars and Stripes have had since Lincoln's proclamation. We can use that phrase and say with them, "Wake Up A. C. W." to the possibilities of fifteen hundred young people as a unit for the selling of Christ's love to the other fellow. President Wilson opens his cabinet meetings with prayer and most of our societies follow this also. Can't you see the president's cabinet on their knees? Does not this vision inspire you? After having decided to go to war the very first thing she did was to finance the proposition. Financing any project is the first step toward planning and a good many of us are using this suggestion to advantage.

For the Individual Members.

As I look back to the time when as a member of a young people's I came to the regular meetings it occurs to me that it was a brother member who gave me the vision of what there was to do. For a time I was interested in the way our work was handled, and one day a young lady asked me to help her in giving an entertainment. This seemed to open the page to a very great many possibilities, some of which are not worked out yet. It has been suggested that the story of how you became a worker in young people's would be helpful to the other fellow. I will print the first five testimonies which reach me before next Friday noon. Put them on 8½x11 regular size paper and not more than eighty words. Your name will be withheld if you so desire. (This will show how many read the column. I hope it takes two weeks to print them). Mail these to 716 Columbia.

Our Rally at Simpson.

One cannot help but feel the undercurrent of awakening in all departments of our work. Last week it was stated that West Jefferson won the cup—which was an error. The winning society was West Creighton and we beg your pardon. The state president of W. C. T. U. gave a splendid address which, while it might have been shorter in length, had a message for young people to take home with them. We heard many compliments on the colored singers. The sketch by our temperance committee had an excellent point and demonstrated the evils of the bar. That was fine, Davis. Plans for the June rally are under way. Societies! give plenty of room for this great meeting in your announcements. It looks like we will hold the rally outdoors. Plan to bring that friend—he will enjoy the crowd and you will enjoy the inspiration. Rev. Merton S. Rice, of Detroit, soon to leave for Europe to preach a world doctrine to the soldiers in the trenches, said: "The whole problem of our social life is to tie the strength of the world to the weakness of the world."

Our Easter Vesper at West Jefferson.

There was quite a few churches represented and in response to call for announcements many individual members showed their hearts were full of desire for their own societies' success and told of the 6:30 meeting. That is fine. Mr. Burson, of Third Presbyterian, gave one of his earnest talks which are always helpful. His heart is in the work. Miss Grace Erwin, of West Jefferson, talked on consecration and devotion and gave us several points worth remembering. The First Evangelical quartet rendered a selection of special music. We all join in our appreciation to everyone who helped in this service.

Communications.

Alliance, Ohio, is thinking of organizing their young people. We are getting out copies of our constitution for them. This is fine, Alliance.

Mr. Davis says that Logansport young folks are sending thanks for the word we sent them last week and will sure be glad to have us come down and see them. Now this is real work that counts and God wants us to "go unto all the world and spread the gospel." For the readers out of town—our organization means standardized methods for winning young people into His work.

We regret to receive the word about our lookout committee chairman Mowever, Miss Werling has been made president of her society at Bethany Presbyterian and a chairman shall be elected to take her place immediately.

GARDEN DEPARTMENT.

The Sophie B. Wright circle's dancing party on April 24, at the Anthony hotel, takes on new interest in the announcement that it is to be a Red Cross benefit. This circle of energetic young women usually works for the benefit of some good cause and the Visiting Nurse league and other charities have been grateful more than once for aid received. The first plan of this dance was to be a novelty affair and it will be in more ways than one. First, expense will be eliminated as much as possible. There will be no favors, but the best of dance music will be played by Mr. Wright and other members of his saxaphone orchestra, of Columbus. The orchestra has appeared at dancing affairs in this city before and made themselves popular. The members of the circle will be dressed in white and black, no colors, but guests are not requested to follow that example unless they want to. The admission tickets are in the form of invitations and are not above the common price for such affairs.

FORESEES TIME TO ENJOY OUR IDEALS

Theosophist R. W. Smith Discusses the Life on Higher Plane.

A very interesting time awaits the man of reasonable desires after death, according to Mr. Ralph W. Smith, who discoursed last night at the Theosophical society on what are alleged to be the actual facts of life in the unseen world. "We must bear in mind," said the speaker, "that the majority of men spend the greater part of their waking life and most of their strength in work that they really do not like, that they would not do at all if it were not necessary in order to earn their living, or support those who are dependent upon them. Realize the condition of the man when all necessity for this grinding toil is over, when it is no longer needful to earn a living, since the astral body requires no food nor clothing nor lodging. If he is a worker, he will work, but then for the first time since his childhood that man is free to do precisely what he likes, and can devote his whole time to whatever may be his chosen occupation—so long, that is, as it is of such a nature as to be capable of realization without physical matter. Suppose that a man's greatest delight is in music; upon the astral plane he has the opportunity of listening to all the grandest music that earth can produce, and is even able t ohear far more in it than before, since here other and fuller harmonies than our dull ears can grasp are now within his reach. The man whose delight is in art, who loves beauty in form and color, has all the loveliness of this higher world to choose from. If his delight is in beauty in nature, he has unequalled possibilities for indulging it, for he can readily and rapidly move from place to place, and enjoy in quick succession wonders of nature which the physical man would need years to visit. And there is no fatigue, for it is the brain and the muscle that tires; the mind unhampered, is tireless."

TAILORED COAT SUIT.

(By Betty Brown.)

New York, April 14.—The "three-piece" suit is one of those garments which are so frequently misnamed in the world of fashion. It is only a one-piece frock or jumper dress with a matching coat.

One of the best designs of the season is shown in today's illustration. The skirt has the least suggestion of curving over the hips, and the coat has the latest "swing" which is produced by suspending the fullness from the shoulders.

The embroidery is of an unusually excellent design, while the hat cannot be surpassed as an adaptation of classic picture shape to practical modern uses.

A STUNNING COAT

New York, April 13.—Daring coloring distinguishes the most attractive of the silk street suits.

Disks embroidered in gorgeous hues make the sports dress illustrated above a particularly charming creation. But the final touch of fashion comes from the new girdle which encircles the waist twice and is knotted low down in the back. Its ends are not tied. One end is merely drawn over the other in a loop.

The colors most in vogue for embroidery are purple, Oriental, such as Chinese red, jade green, mandarin yellow and lapis blue. Just at present a dash of brilliant red is introduced into costumes of almost any color whether designed for house or street garments.

OPERETTA PROVES BIG SUCCESS.

Principals and Choruses in the "Lost Princess" Did Wonderful Work for Amateurs.

The operetta benefit for Hope hospital, "The Lost Princess," attracted a large audience to the Majestic theater on Friday evening and proved to be musically and in its presentation a real delight, not because it was done by local people and because everyone in the audience had friends or children in the cast, but because it was a performance of so much genuine merit with many charming and lovely things about it. The musical score is original and singable and singers and orchestra shared the praise of the director, Mrs. Hortense Reynolds, who has a way of "hypnotizing" those whom she directs in presenting an operetta and so gets wonderful results. The cast was a fine one and while many praises might be truthfully written about each one individually, such a notice must of necessity be brief. The leading role, Bo-Peep, the Princess, was sung by Mrs. Helen Cutler Dickey, who has the voice, the personality and the imagination to give the part the character necessary. Mrs. H. H. Rogers as Mother Goose and Miss Ruth Gumpper as the Queen of Hearts were other feminine roles that were sung and acted on the same high order of presentation. Earl Thompson, one of the city's best baritones, had a part calling for singing and comedy talent, both of which he displayed, and Albert Gessler in the more sentimental role of the lover appreciated his opportunities. Mr. Thompson and Charles Konvalinka and Miss Maribel Olds had the comedy roles and "made good," returning again and again to encores. Miss Olds and her bunch of children made a continual hit all the time they were on the stage. Miss Virginia Cary as Red Ridinghood stepped momentarily from fairyland and Rush McClure was equally easy and capable. D. B. Douglass made a capital King Cole and Anne Weaver as a herald spoke lines with the distinction of a little actress. As for the choruses they were remarkably well done. The maids in the garden, the herdsmen, the dairymaids and the cooks, the children who lived in a shoe and the children who were the neighbors, the Boy Scouts, the Mary contraries, the chickens, the housemaids, the chefs, the marigolds, the grape maidens, the jumping jacks, little Regine Minsky as the cattail and the dancers, led by Ellen Hudson, each and all went on and off the stage in fanciful and appropriate character costume with a grace and beauty that did not depend on dazzling light effects but were expressive of youth, enthusiasm, imagination and delight in doing something to help somebody else and also with a most appreciable understanding that they were a part of Mother Goose and her followers. It was an astonishingly good performance for amateur work and it smacked of the professional in many instances, both in beauty and in execution. Miss Constance Bogart, the piano accompanist for the rehearsals and production, deserves high praise for her work, while the orchestra followed Mrs. Reynolds so closely that it would never have been concluded that but one rehearsal had been held. The entertainment closed with a tableau of Columbia by Miss Winifred Ellingham and entire cast while the orchestra played "The Star-Spangled Banner" and the audience rose and sang one verse. The programs of patriotic appearance were unusually good-looking as well as being a financial success. Mrs. Darwin S. Myers had entire charge of that work. Other people, grownups and young folks who have put in weeks of work and hours of practice, including the skill and ability of the director of the performance, Mrs. Reynolds, and the stage manager, Miss Hortense Porter, are Mesdames Hudson, Johns, Fauve, Peltier, Keegan, Shryock, Rohan, J. Stunning Spring Cape.

(By Betty Brown.)

New York, April 13.—There's charm about the new spring capes which makes them positively irresistible. One of the handsomest as well as the most practical of the season's models is made of gray gabardine and is lined with navy blue gabardine, and the result is a garment which is practically reversible. It is a feminine version of a military model and is designed for motoring but can be put to many other uses.

The smart little toque worn with this cape is uniquely ornamented in Spanish fashion.

By BIDDY BYE.

Cheese contains over 25 per cent. more protein than the same weight of porterhouse steak as purchased, and nearly twice as much fat. Most housewives now give cheese its proper place among economical foods, but not all cooks know how to make out bills of fare which are quite satisfactory, using cheese as the central food. Uncle Sam's experts, however, have made many experiments along this line, and they recommend the following:

Menu No. 1—Macaroni and cheese; raisin bread or date bread; orange and water-cress salad; baked apples; sugar cookies; cocoa.

Menu No. 2—Cheese fondue; toast, zwieback, or thin and crisp baking powder biscuit; celery; potatoes, baked, boiled, or fried in deep fat; peas, or some other fresh vegetables; coffee; fruit salad with crisp cookies or meringues.

Menu No. 3—Clear soup; Baked eggs with cheese; baked potatoes; lettuce salad; a sweet jelly, crab apple or quince for example, or a preserve; rye bread; orange and banana shortcake; tea.

HELP UNCLE SAM BY PRESERVING EGGS.

Women's most important work in wartime is doing the thing which is nearest at hand. Conserving the nation's food supply is work which is always at hand. It can be practiced three times a day, and at irregular intervals in the week, in the way of storing or packing food for future use.

April, May and June make the great egg producing season of the year. This is the time for all those who keep hens to preserve the surplus stock of eggs for next fall and winter. And it is often wise for housewives who buy eggs to invest in dozens of the strictly fresh kind, at spring prices and store them against a coming H. C. of L. crisis.

The quality of the eggs laid in the spring is better than at any other time of the year. In other months eggs should be put down the day they are laid.

For the farmer, or person who wants to preserve a few eggs for his own use, the easiest and perhaps the best method which can be employed is the use of water glass or sodium silicate. This water glass is a syrupy liquid which should be mixed one part water glass to nine parts water which has been previously boiled. The solution should be kept in a clean receptacle, such as a crock, or stone jar. Kegs or barrels may be used, provided they are scalded thoroughly and are absolutely free from odors. After the jar has been partially filled with the water glass solution the eggs can be put in from day to day, and should remain at least two inches below the surface of the solution.

Eggs put down in this manner and stored in a cool, dark place will come out during the following winter as a very good article of food.

One gallon of water glass will make solution to cover nearly 50 dozen eggs. The commercial water glass is used for preserving eggs, as it is much cheaper than the chemically pure article.

Eggs also can be preserved in lime water, salt, patent egg preservatives, or they can be greased and stored in sawdust or bran. But eggs packed in salt are liable to lose as much as 33 per cent by evaporation, while those which are greased sometimes lose 25 per cent. Moreover, they may become tainted, while eggs preserved in water glass are not only satisfactory after having been packed away for months, but also when kept for three or four weeks after removal from solution.

Most packed eggs will not beat up well for cake making or frosting, while eggs taken from a water glass solution seem quite equal to the average fresh eggs to be had in the markets. Their shells, however, are apt to crack in boiling. It is said that this can be prevented by piercing the larger end of the egg with a needle before putting it into the water.

If it is desired to preserve eggs in limewater, the solution may be prepared by placing 2 or 3 pounds of unslacked lime in 5 gallons of water and allowing the mixture to stand until the lime settles and the liquid is clear. The eggs should be placed in a clean earthenware jar or other suitable vessel and covered with the clear limewater. Sometimes a pound of salt is used with the lime, but it is said that such a mixture imparts a slight taste of lime to the eggs.

Other articles by Biddy Bye on wartime economies in the kitchen will be published from day to day.

WANT MORE SHOOTERS.

President E. A. Wagner Appoints Membership Committee.

Because of the warlike conditions in the country and the unpreparedness of the eligible timber for armies, E. A. Wagner, president of the Fort Wayne Rifle club has appointed a membership committee with a view of bringing in a lot of young fellows and learning them how to shoot and handle arms. The Rifle club has a five target indoor range in the basement of the big store house building at the General Electric works and an arrangement with Company E for the use of the outdoor range a mile or two north of the city. Thus every facility for target practice will be offered the members of the Rifle club and President Wagner believes its membership will be greatly increased within the next week or two. The membership committee is composed of Attorney E. V. Emrick, Dr. H. E. Glock, R. H. Chadwick, B. J. Stroud and J. F. Bartels.

VAST RESOURCES OF NATION FOR BATTLE

Munitions Concerns Show Mighty Capacity for Making Shells.

Washington, April 14.—The navy department made public today bids received from twenty-five munitions makers on an order for 1,578,000 shells of all calibres, the figures bringing out sharply the enormous capacity of American plants. Eleven bidders each offered to absorb the entire order for 1,170,000 one-pounder projectiles and within a few weeks to begin deliveries at the rate of from 100,000 to 500,000 shells a month. There were six separate proposals covering the entire order for 3,000 14-inch shells. The bids show also a capacity to produce 30,000 six-inch shells, 2,500 14-inch and about the same number of 12-inch shells a month after the machinery is set in motion. The Bridgeport projectile company bid on all classes of shells up to 6-inch and showed a monthly output of 1,200 of the largest type and 100,000 one-pounder shells within a short time.

The Baldwin Locomotive works could begin delivery of 14-inch shells within one hundred days and turn out 500 a month thereafter. The Bethlehem Steel company could deliver 750 big shells a month, beginning within a year and within ten days could deliver five-inch, four-inch and three-inch shells at a rate of 10,000 a month. The Washington Steel and Ordnance company is prepared to deliver 100 14-inch and 100 12-inch shells within six weeks and turn out one-pounder projectiles at a rate of from 3,000 to 5,000 a day thereafter.

GERMAN REVERSE GETS ON NERVES OF THE PEOPLE

Amsterdam, April 14.—The military critic of the Vossische Zeitung of Berlin writes that he has received many letters which prove that "the nerves of many readers are beginning to give way." He dwells on the "unfounded" excitement which he states is spreading among those at home and warns the public not to judge the situation from single events, but to take events as a whole into consideration.

WILL NOT RAISE FOOD FOR ENGLAND

Head of German Alliance Says He is for America Against Germany.

Cleveland, O., April 14.—That German-Americans will not join in the intensive farming movement on the ground that it would help Great Britain and her allies, was the assertion of Herman Fellinger, a member of Mayor Davis' war board, here today. "All German-Americans, while they are backing America as against Germany, are praying for the defeat of Great Britain and her allies," said Fellinger. "It is too much to expect from them to raise foodstuffs for her allies."

Following a statement by Myron T. Herrick, chairman of the board, in attempting to restore order, that Fellinger's attitude was misunderstood and that Fellinger and all other German-Americans were loyal. Fellinger maintained that this was true, but that he could not do otherwise than hope for the defeat of the allies.

Fellinger is president of the German-American alliance.

PENNSY EMPLOYES SHOW PATRIOTISM

Raising of American Flag is Occasion for a Big Demonstration.

If there were any suspicions of disloyalty to country among the Pennsylvania employes in the minds of any, they were sureiy dispelled by the patriotic demonstrations at the big shop at noon Saturday and again at 4:30 o'clock at the round house, when dedicatory exercises for a number of flags that had been erected in the past week were held. Each was attended by thousands of people, the greater portion being the employes of the company and members of their families.

The greatest of the demonstrations, of course, was on Holman street, where nine flags were dedicated as follows: The master mechanic's office building, the superintendent's building, the machine shop, the erecting shop, the boiler shop, the tin and pipe shop, the blacksmith shop, the planning mills and the power plant.

The first feature of the day, which was not on the program, was the assembling at the Pennsylvania passenger station on Baker street of the fifty of sixty men employed in the night gang at the erecting and machine shops, and lead by the First regiment drum corps, marched to Clinton street and through the shops, each man carrying an American flag. This demonstration was made ten minutes before the hour appointed for the closing of the shop and it created such enthusiasm among the shopmen that they were evidently incapable of further work and orders were given to blow the whistle.

At this moment, the Elks' band, which had just arrived on the scene, started up a patriotic air and the shopmen, each in his working clothes and face and hands begrimmed with dirt, came pouring out of the Barr street entrance and lined up in front of the speakers' stand, where they remained throughout the exercises interesting and enthusiastic listeners to the speeches.

Before the speaking began, Battery B and Company E arrived on the scene and formed on the vacant lot opposite the stand, while hundreds of ladies, gentlemen and children lined up on the sidewalk and street, making a solid mass of humanity extending over a distance of 300 or 400 feet. Handsome programs, bearing on the title page, a colored picture of the American flag and on the inner pages the songs "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America," were passed out among the audience and will be preserved as souvenirs of the patriotic demonstration. The program was as follows:

Selections—Elks' band.
Song, "America"—Assemblage.
Remarks by chairman—W. H. Moeller.
Introductory remarks—Master Mechanic E. E. Griest.
Address—Rev. A. J. Folsom.
Song, "Star Spangled Banner"—Blacksmiths' quartette.
Address—M. C. Niezer.
Call to colors—Bugler Co. E.
Hoisting of colors—Capt. Ray McAdams, Co. E.
"Star Spangled Banner"—Elks' band.
President's salute, twenty-one guns—Battery B., Capt. J. C. Sheffer.

Following the exercises, the shopmen, lead by the band and Company E, marched around the block on which the main part of the plant is located, saluting and cheering as they passed each flag.

The committemen to whom much of the credit for the excellent patriotic demonstration is due W. H. Moeller, A. J. Johnson, P. E. Bresnahan, J. H. Deck, F. S. Doroit, O. J. Farnan, E. E. Griest, J. H. Hobrock, J. P. Labbe and C. Miller.

E. E. Griest's Speech.

Mr. Griest in his intorductory remarks, emphasized the importance of the railways and all their departments, including the shops, to the government in case of war. He said:

"Ladies and Gentlemen: I am delighted to see this great gathering of patriotic citizens. One can not doubt the loyalty of the employes of the Pennsylvania, or how they stand on the very important matter that is giving all of us grave concern.

"You have probably already noticed that I am not accustomed to public speaking, and it is not my intention to compete with such worthy orators as we have with us today. I only wish that I had the power of oratory possessed by these gentlemen who are to follow, as I have two matters of great moment that I would like to drive home.

"From reports issued by the government, I have been convinced that there is, right now, a food shortage in this country, and this fact is further brought out by the prices we are paying for the necessities of life. It is difficult to estimate the value to our country of any service that will add to the food supply. Large numbers of our good young men from the farms are enlisting, and, thus, instead of being producers of life's necessities, they are becoming consumers. This will further add to the food shortage. It seems essential to me, therefore, that each and every one of us plant all available space in products for our tables. Your children can not perform a more loyal or greater service to our country than by using their spare time in cultivating tracts of ground. The soldiers and sailors must be supplied with the best of food. Our president, our governor and our mayor have called upon us to do this patriotic duty. I feel confident that the Pennsylvania men will do their part. Will you do it, men?

Now that war is declared and there has been so much said about "slackers" and men becoming benedicts to keep from serving their country, I feel duty bound to give you my views as they apply to our own employes. I ask that you carefully consider the very great importance of the railroads as arteries of commerce. At the time war was declared in Europe, no particular attention was given the railroads by some of the warring nations, and, as a result, great confusion existed until the governments stepped in, took charge, and manned the railroads with soldiers. We can not afford to make this mistake. The great battles of the present war have been fought to gain control of important railroads or terminals.

"The president has issued a call for the building of 3,000 ships to break the submarine blockade, and to build these ships the railroads must play an important part in transporting the necessary material. Our railroad is now short of motive power and cars. I feel, therefore, that it is your patriotic duty to remain at your machines and at your benches. Railroads are as necessary for the defense of our country as battleships and armies, and it is essentially necessary that the railroads be fully manned for doing their part.

"The government realizes the value of railroads and how necessary it is to keep them open, as they have placed soldiers at every bridge and every tunnel of any importance on every railroad in the United States. We have nineteen soldiers guarding two Western Division bridges, at the present time.

"Loyalty, men, means devoted allegiance to your government. The government must have the fullest use of the railroads. Therefore, your patriotic duty is to serve this railroad to the best of your ability. This applies not only to those who may feel it their duty to enlist, but those also who may be able to make more money, temporarily, at some other business or in some other shop. No person will call you a "slacker" for failure to enlist if you do your part by helping to provide our government with the necessary means of transporting our armies and food and supplies."

G. E. HOME GUARDS.

Company With Fifty Men to Be Organized.

The employes at the General Electric works have started the organization of a company of home guards, which will have a membership of fifty or more men. The organization project has been brewing for some time, but took no definite form until Thursday night, when some of the leaders met and decided to form a company and Friday night it was further advanced by electing R. O. Orff chairman and J. H. Breidenstein secretary. Later the organization was effected by electing Lieutenant W. Howard Miller captain and declaring that the organization will be permanent. Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock a committee appointed to draft a constitution will meet in the firemen's assembly room at the works for that purpose. This committee consists of R. O. Orff, chairman; J. H. Briedenstein, Earl Watterman, Robert Bartel and J. R. Bird. They will submit the result of their efforts to the company for approval Monday night. While the members of this company are all employes of the General Electric works, they will be subject to the state and government laws bearing on that subject. The original idea was a membership of fifty, but the indications are that the limit will be extended and it may reach one hundred before many weeks. There are many men anxious to join it.

PROGRAM FOR SHOP MEETING.

The Blacksmith Male quartet will have entire charge of the program for the noon-day meeting next Tuesday at the Pennsylvania main shop. The program will be entirely musical, furnished by the quartet, composed of Messrs. J. C. Traxler, first tenor; F. H. Gaylord, second tenor; C. B. Watterson, first bass, and S. E. The quartet numbers will be as follows: "Crossing the Bar," Tennyson; "Bull Dog and Bull Frog," Welsh; "Po' Little Lamb," Parks; "Old Farmer Slow," Geibel; "Fotch Erlong de Hoecake, Dinah," Fearis. The shopmen have been turning out in large numbers at recent meetings and are thus showing their appreciation of the fine features of the varied programs being arranged by the committeemen and secretaries of the Railroad Y. Scheffer, will fire a salute when the flag reaches its position on the staff and is unfolded. The musical part of the exercises will be taken care of by shop quartet. H. U. Anthony, organizer for the hoisting engineers, who has been engaged in organizing a union in the city for several days, will complete the organization at a meeting at the corner of Barr and Columbia streets tonight at 8 o'clock. FLAG DEMONSTRATION.

Patriotic N. P. Officials and Employes Hoist the Colors.

The unfurling of the American flag on the handsome pole erected between the Nickel Plate office building and passenger station at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon was a most pretty and patriotic scene. Miss Marie Emrich, stenographer for Superintendent W. F. Watterson, raised and liberated the flag, midst the cheers of a large number of the employes and the screeching of whistles of the yard engines brought there for that purpose. Speeches were made by Judge Walter Olds and Captain E. H. Kilbourne. A military salute was given by the battery.

BRAKEMAN HOBSON LOSES AN ARM

Fort Wayne Man Run Down by String of Cars in Bellevue Yards.

E. B. Hobson, the Nickel Plate brakeman, who was so badly injured at Bellevue at 4:30 o'clock Friday afternoon, has a chance for recovery, according to news from his bedside today. The attending surgeon announces that the injured man will lose an arm, but the mangled leg will be saved unless some unexpected complications arise. Mr. Hobson is in the Bellevue hospital, where the amputation of the arm will be made.

Brakeman Hobson was a member of Conductor Charles Compton's crew and left here Friday morning on an eastbound through freight train, arriving in the Bellevue yards at 4:30 o'clock Friday afternoon. As he stepped from the caboose, he walked upon an adjoining track immediately in front of a string of cars that were being pushed by a switch engine and was knocked down. The cars were moving slowly and only one pair of wheels passed over Mr. Hobson and he escaped death. One arm was so badly mangled, however, that amputation was necessary, and one of his legs was also crushed and at first it was feared that, too, would have to be amputated. Later developments led the surgeon to believe the leg could be saved and an effort in that direction is being made. There are also some internal injuries, but they are not of a dangerous character, the attending surgeon says.

Mr. Hobson is about thirty-five years old and has a son aged six years, who resides with his sister near the Indiana School for Feeble Minded. When in Fort Wayne Brakeman Hobson rooms at the home of Conductor N. S. Patton, 1324 West Main street. He is a brother to Willam A. Hobson, treasurer of the Fort Wayne Oil and Supply company, who went to Bellevue last night to see him. A sister also resides in the country, just north of the city, and the little son of the injured man lives with her. Mr. Hobson has worked on the Nickel Plate for six or seven years, with the exception of a few months when he was employed on the Baltimore and Ohio, with headquarters at Garrett. He returned to this city last October and has been employed as a brakeman on the UNicked Plate ever since. He is a member of Fort Wayne lodge, No. 136, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

TWO KILLED AT THE NARLO STONE QUARRY

W. C. Leininger and J. W. Richards Victims of Runaway Car Accident.

W. O. Leininger, of Bellevue, and John W. Richards, of Fostoria, Nickel Plate employes, were so badly injured at Narlo, Ohio, near Maple Grove, that they died soon after the accident, which was due to a car breaking away from an engine and dashing down the incline to the stone quarry, running through a switch and crashing into another car, at 1:30 o'clock Friday afternoon. Leininger, who was a brakeman on the stone quarry train with Conductor E. W. Horton, was riding the car as it was being moved by the engine. When it broke loose and started down the incline track at a frightful speed he made an effort to stop it, but failed, and when he ran on to another track and struck a car he was thrown off in such manner that the wheels ran over him, inflicting injuries which proved fatal a few minutes afterwards. Mr. Richards was a car repairman and resided in Fostoria. He was under the car struck by the runaway and the wheels passed over him, causing injuries from which he died while being taken to Fostoria on a special train. Both cars in the collision were demolished and the victims were buried beneath the debris, causing delay in getting aid to them. Both men were middle-aged and had been employed on the Nickel Plate a number of years. Each had a family. Narlo is a station thirty miles west of Bellevue, from which immense quantities of stone are shipped, there being big quarries there. The train on which Leininger was a brakeman was known as the "stone quarry" train because its work was to handle the products of the quarry alone, delivering stone to connecting lines at Bellevue and elsewhere.

FOUND GUILTY THREE TIMES IN HALF DAY

Pawnbroker Pays Fine on Charge of Lending Money Illegally.

Three times in a row, Judge Kerr pronounced Ben Michaelson, pawn broker and second hand dealer, guilty of law violation, Saturday morning. Michaelson was fined $10 for the first offense and given indefinite continuance on the other two complaints, brought against him.

Joseph Gosser, of Defiance, Ohio, testified that Michaelson had loaned him $1 on security of Gosser's suitcase. Gosser paid $2 to get the suitcase back a few days later and found that a part of his belongings were gone, he told.

Michaelson does not have a license to lend money. He was found guilty of violating the petty lender law and fined. Later he was convicted of failing to report articles which he had purchased from men who left goods with him. He was also found guilty of buying goods from intoxicated men.

Flag in Court.

Police court was brightened by a new flag, seven feet long, which was draped along the wall above the desk of Judge Kerr and out over the witness stand. The judge had purchased the flag because he said he believed the people in police court needed its soothing influence as well as folks who are not accused of misdemeanors. Representatives of nearly every nation climbed to the witness stand and under the folds of the ensign of universal freedom told their stories of mistakes and failures.

First Straw Hat.

The first straw hat, which has been noted in company with men folks this year, was removed by John Christlieb, Nebraska resident, who slipped into the basement room to hear the crime stories. He held a light panama hat carefully in his hands as he listened to his brothers' woes. Christlieb also wore an overcoat.

Pappert Gets Two.

Detective Sergeant William F. Pappert captured two men who are wanted in other cities, Friday afternoon. He secured Charles Murray, hotel keeper, who was sent to the state farm last summer for operating a blind tiger at Lake Wawasee, and who is wanted in Warsaw for breaking his parole from that institution. Murray was working here and staying on Washington street. Elon A. Smith, of Rochester, was the other victim of Pappert's search. He was taken from a house at 1615 California avenue. It is claimed that he is charged with passing worthless checks in Rochester. He will have a hearing before Judge Kerr at 5 o'clock Saturday evening, at which time Rochester officers are expected to come for him.

Nellie Apprehended.

After two days' futile search, Nellie Ellet alias Nellie Dale, was taken by Officer Welch Friday afternoon. She was staying on a farm near Fort Wayne. The woman is wanted in Toledo upon a charge of stealing a valuable coat from a department store there, police have been notified. She is held under $500 bond for hearing on Monday, but is expected to be released to Toledo authorities before that time.

Wasn't Him.

John (Never-sweat) Lee, leader of the banana bearers' strike last summer and a well known police character, denied the charge of removing store boxes from the rear of a Columbia street shoe store. He blamed a friend named "Bill" Hicks, who he said sometimes used John's pushcart. Lee was fined $1 and costs.

William McCullum, charged with removing copper wire from the basement of the Woolworth Ten Cent store, was released by Judge Kerr because McCullum has a family. The man must make regular reports to the judge as to his conduct.

Other Police Court Cases.

Mr. and Mrs. John Wessel, sr., came home today from a trip to Florida.

School Children Will Aid in Farming Vacant Lots.

Fort Wayne will tolerate no slacking in the "grow a garden" campaign which is now open. Mayor Hosey expects to make that clear to real estate men, especially, he says, and may call a meeting of the Real Estate exchange soon to explain that vacant lots must be planted or action may be taken through the attorney general.

The mayor says he has learned that in war time the city has a right to make the best possible use of all its property in aiding the country. He thinks the council can order the use of vacant lots for food planting in this moment of stress. Mayor Hosey will explain his attitude to real estate men if he calls a meeting next week.

Mayor Hosey has been told by heads of the various city schools that classes in gardening will be formed among children in order to insure the cultivating of all lots. The city council may be asked by the mayor to appropriate money for securing seeds for the school planting and for people who are too poor to buy their own.

"This movement is the best thing that ever happened to Fort Wayne," said Mayor Hosey Saturday. "It makes use of all our ground. It will stop the weed nuisance. A lot for sale will look as good to a sensible person if it is filled with waving corn, as if it stood chin-high in weeds."

SEVEN CASES.

John Ault, auditor of the city light plant, will act as secretary-treasurer of the institution in absence of John Wessel, jr., who joined the regular army on Friday. Wessel will serve in the army during duration of the war. That is the hectic question of time. Wessel is not expecting it to be a ninety day campaign.

Three large electric lighted signs are to be reared for the city lighting department soon, members of the board of works decided Saturday morning. The glowing displays will be in the most prominent parts of town and will tell why all should "do it electrically."

Will Repair Bridge.

DEWALD BOYS ANSWER CALL

WILL ENLIST WITH THE SIGNAL CORPS

Several Have Quit National Guard to Join the Regular Army.

Brotherly friendship and ties will not be severed in at least one family in Fort Wayne. Three sons of Mr. and Mrs. George DeWald, of East DeWald street, have joined the colors. Stephen, Edward and Jay DeWald have answered the call of their country and have enlisted in the signal corps, which is being organized in this city.

This is the first instance which has come to light where three brothers have joined the colors at the same time. All three young men are widely known and all are athletes of prominence in the city. The parents of the young men are pleased over the action of their sons.

Recruiting in all the branches of the service has not slumped in the least and Saturday was no exception. Officers are expecting a larger rush Saturday afternoon and evening.

Many Join Regulars.

Many of the boys of the national guard have severed their connections with this organization and have joined the regulars. However, all three units have nearly attained war strength.

Lieutenant Trent Stout, the examining officer, states that many of the applicants are discarded on account of weak eyes. Undersize and underweight also causes many to be rejected. The size limit is five feet four inches and the weight limit is 129 pounds. The officer also is finding many cases of affected hearts.

Takes Clerks.

Four clerks for assistance in the army recruiting station were taken Friday by Captain Thomas Ryan. The men selected from a number of applicants were Arthur A. Rodemeyer, Joe Finan, William Junk and Charles Wild. William Hadak is the stenographer who has been permanently employed. The other men will serve during the war.

Will Work Sunday.

Officers at the army recruiting station will work all day Sunday. Members of the battery will exhibit the latest army equipment at the picture shows. More literature will be distributed.

Eighty-six men were sent from Fort Wayne on Friday. Twenty-five more had signed up at noon Saturday.

The Lewis machine gun was used in connection with two flag raising ceremonies and will be employed at the LaSalle street flag raising on Sunday afternoon.

Heaps of Talk.

Several large rolls of posters to be used for "talking for the navy," were delivered to the naval recruiting station Saturday morning. The red, white and blue cards will be put up all over the city Sunday. Three men joined the navy on Saturday.

RECEIVER IS NAMED FOR ROYAL ARCANUM

Boston, April 14.—Thomas J. Boynton, formerly attorney general of Massachusetts, was appointed receiver of the supreme council of the Royal Arcanum by Federal Judge Aldrich today on petition of Arthur L. Hobart, of Braintree, a member of the order, who holds a death benefit certificate calling for $500. Hobart alleged that the reserve fund of the organization amounting to $3,800,000 had been illegally administered and that it would be entirely depleted within two years unless the court interfered. He asked that an injunction be issued restraining the officers from further administrating the funds and that the receiver wind up the affairs of the council.

OFFERS BILL TO PLACE FIGHTERS AT OTHER WORK

Washington, D. C., April 14.—A bill to direct the secretary of war "to enlist or transfer from present enlistment for farm, commercial and manufacturing work within the United States an army of 200,000 men between 18 and 60 years old for a two year term of service unless sooner discharged," was introduced today by Representative Scott of Michigan. Their compensation under the bill would be the same as now paid privates in the regular army.

GEO. MULLEN WITH KOKOMO

Old Time Major Leaguer is One of Bowlers in State Tourney.

Everything Ready for Opening of the Eighth Indiana Pin Meet.

Among the bowlers who meet here this evening for the opening of the eighth Indiana tournament to be held at the Metropolitan alleys, is George Mullen, former Detroit Tiger hurler. Mullen comes with the Kokomo delegation and will roll in the five-man, doubles and single events.

Another member of the Kokomo delegation is G. S. Garrett, of Peru, who in the last national tourney at Grand Rapids broke the world's record for three-game total, stacking up a count of 721 pins. The record score was made in doubles competition.

All Ready for Opening.

Everything is set for the opening of the meet. At 8 o'clock the first squad of six teams will roll, five of them being from Gary and the other from Hammond. The bowling will be done on six alleys, and six prominent Fort Wayne men have been chosen to shoot the balls down the lanes in the initial matches. They are Mayor W. J. Hosey, Maurice Niezer, Sherman Cutshall, Lew G. Ellingham, E. C. Miller and Charles Biederwolf.

At 10 o'clock the second squad of six teams are slated to perform. Of these five-man outfits, four are from Kokomo and two from Michigan City. The work begins again at 7 o'clock Sunday morning and keeps going until midnight, with no intermission. If everything goes well the finish will occur about 3 o'clock in the afternoon of Sunday, May 6.

No Admission Fee.

A rumor has been wending its way around the city that an admittance fee would be charged those who wished to witness the tourney bowling. This is all wrong and Secretary George Stang wishes to have it corrected. At all times during the meet the doors will be open to everybody who wants to see the pins fly.

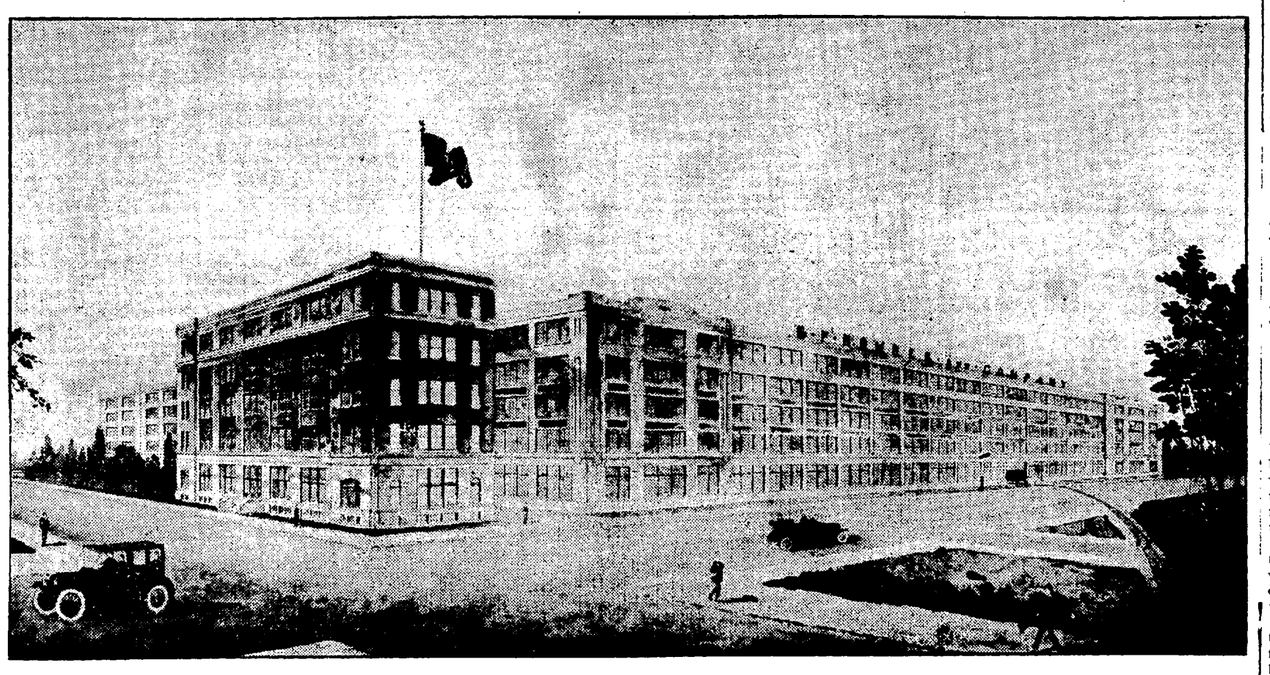
DRAWING OF MAGNIFICENT NEW OFFICE BUILDING TO BE ERECTED BY S. F. BOWER.



The above is the architect's drawing of the magnificent new $350,000 office building to be erected by S. F. Bowser & Co. and for which the contract has already been let. The structure will be six stories high and basement, or 100 feet above the sidewalk, 150 feet long and 50 feet wide, with an addition in the rear 55 feet long and 30 feet wide. It will be one of the best equipped office buildings in the middle west and will have every modern convenience. The basement will be nine and a half feet high, the second floor fourteen and a half feet; the second, third, fourth and fifth floors twelve feet and the sixth floor sixteen feet. The sixth floor will be used as an assembly room and in which all the various meetings in connection with the plant will be held. Two rapid elevators are to be installed.

The first eight feet of the building will be of stone and the remaiander of brick, the same as is in the new Harmar school. A change has been made from what is indicated in the above picture. The building will stand in the middle of the square with beautiful parks on the east and west sides.

The ventilating system will cost approximately $50,000 by which the building will be ventilated properly without the raising of a window. In the extremely warm weather the interior will be from ten to twelve degrees cooler than on the outside, the air being washed, as Mr. Bowser explained it, every ten minutes.

The concrete foundation on which the building will rest is now in and the structure will be pushed to completion as rapidly as possible.

WIFE WOULD LIKE TO KNOW ABOUT IT

Wonders if Her Husband Was Really Killed Two Years Ago.

Mrs. Edith Davis, 1605 Cass street, heard two years ago that her husband was killed in a railroad wreck on April 15, 1915. She did not think much about it at the time, she says. Her husband had made short trips away from home before that and left her to care for the five little children. She just thought that his being killed might be a mistake, she said.

But her curiosity has gotten the best of her. Now she really wants to know if that was her husband who was crushed in the Warsaw wreck. She has written to the Warsaw city health officer, Dr. S. A. Shoemaker, asking him if there is any proof that the man killed in the catastrophe was Mr. Davis.

"No, it will not make any particular difference as to my future," sighed the woman, who wonders if she is a widow. "I am used to keeping the children now, but I would just like to know."

PURDUE BOYS WANT TO SERVE IN AERO CORPS

Lafayette, Ind., April 14.—Forty students at Purdue university have signified their willingness to serve in an aero corps in the war with Germany. A letter has been written to the officers of the United States army setting forth the offer of services and asking for information regarding equipment and possible training stations. An effort will be made to get more students to sign an agreement to join.

The Purdue cadet corps will work on combat problems which will require one-half day each to complete on Wednesday and Saturday.

The maneuvers will be in the country near Lafayette. It has been announced that commissions as first lieutenants in the United States army reserve corps have been granted to Prof. Sayre, of the horticultural department; W. H. E. Holmes, cadet-colonel of the cadet corps, and A. G. Philips, of the poultry department.

Some had pinned little American flags on the fronts of their blouses while others carried flags removed from automobiles and presented by their owners.

S. P. Hirsch, of the sales department of the General Electric works, is in New York on business for the company.

Great Plans Are Made for Celebration of Battle of Lexington.

Freedom's shout will be echoed in the blowing of every whistle and ringing of every bell in the city Thursday afternoon, April 19. When the new flag is raised on the large pole in the lot near the traction company building a field piece will sound the first deep-throated call for a general salute from all over Fort Wayne.

Factories over the city will close in honor of the day, which commemorates the battle of Lexington. Schools will be dismissed. Stores are expected to close at noon.

Line of march for the gigantic parade, which will start at 1 o'clock and which will embody every organization in the city, will be from the Pennsylvania railroad down Calhoun street to the transfer corner and west on Main street to the traction station. At the county court house a reviewing stand will be erected on which will be seated the soldiers of '61 to '65. Dr. George Jaynes, of Wabash, will deliver the principal address at the flag-raising ceremony at 2 o'clock.

Mayor Hosey will also make a speech. School children will enact patriotic scenes. Several bands will play while the assemble dthong sings "The Star-Spangled Banner" and bedlam of greetings breaks forth from every factory and church.

The program will continue through the evening. There will be several speeches delivered from the platform at the court house.

In the morning parade all participants will be on foot. No automobiles will be allowed in the line of march. Street cars will not run during the time of the parade.

A call for organization is sounded to all orders of the city by the committee representing the temporary organization of the Council for Military and Naval Affairs composed of E. A. Crane, Frank M. Hogan and C. R. Dane. Members of the committee met Saturday afternoon in the Commercial club and drew up an invitation to all organizations of the city to partake in the final forming of the war council.

LINCOLN LIFE CLUB HAS START ON SKED

Several games have been added to the schedule of the Lincoln Life club by Manager Mart Cleary. A contract was closed Friday with owner L. B. Dupee, of the Colored Giants, for a game to be played at League park, Sunday, May 6. The Giants have added several high-class performers since last year and will present a strong lineup when the season starts. Among the new players are West of the St. Louis Giants and Lawson, formerly with a fast team in Dallas, Texas.

Among the other games signed for the Insurance men are those with Marion and Kendallville. The club will go to Marion Sunday, May 27, and to Kendallville, May 13. The Reds of the latter city will appear here Decoration day.

The new uniforms for the club arrived Friday and will be distributed to the players next week. Everyone signed with the club is set for the game with Vandy's outfit April 22, and they expect to make the Central leaguers stab considerably.

$500 ADDED TO SALARY

Commissioners Grant the Petition of Increase for Judges.

WILL NOW RECEIVE $5,000 ANNUALLY

Twenty-Nine Lawyers and Two Newspaper Men Were Petitioners.

Salaries of Judge John W. Eggeman of the Allen circuit court and Judge Carl Yaple of the superior court, have now been increased to $5,000 a year. This comes about by the granting of a petition by the board of county commissioners.

Twenty-nine lawyers of Fort Wayne and two newspaper men were the petitioners asking that the salary be increased by $500. The petition sets forth that the present salary of $3,500 from the state and $1,000 from the county, "is not an adequate compensation for the services of the judges." The High Cost of Living is also set forth in the petition as another reason why the salary should be increased.

This petition was granted under the provision of a new law which was passed by the last state legislature.

It is believed that this new ruling will go into effect immediately.

BOLIVIA HAS BROKEN OFF WITH GERMANY

Washington, April 14.—Official notification that Bolivia had severed diplomatic relations with Germany reached the state department today in a note from Minister Calderon. The text of the communication may be made public later.

WORK FOR LARGER CROPS CONTINUE

Many Farmers Consult the County Agent for Ideas of Better Farming.

Efforts on the part of the county agent to supply the necessary information for better and larger crops continues. He is doing everything in his power to help the farmers solve the problem of understanding their lands. Many farmers were in the city Saturday consulting him on various questions.

The time has arrived when preparations are being made for the planting of potatoes. Each year the potato scab has ruined many crops. The county agent herewith presents a remedy for this disease: Soak seed potatoes before cutting, at least two hours in a solution of one pint of formaldehyde to twenty-five gallons of water. Plant on land free from scab. Do not fertilize with manure from animals fed on scabby potatoes.

The same solution may be used for several treatments allowing potatoes to soak about thirty minutes longer for each consecutive lot.

Formaldehyde is not corrosive and the solution may safely be used in any kind of a vessel.

The county agent also states that care should be taken in safeguarding against smut in the oats. He asks that farmers consult him in this matter.

FREE BOOK FOR GARDENERS PUBLISHED BY GOVERNMENT

Washington, April 14.—As a stimulus to the appeal for more intensive gardening to feed the country during the war the department of agriculture has prepared for free distribution of a complete manual for the guidance of gardeners. Thousands of copies have been printed and as many more as the demand requires will be turned out later. The department will mail a copy to any person requesting it. The booklet contains detailed instructions, founded upon the best scientific and practical knowledge and states comprehensively so as to be of value to novices in particular. The principles of garden plotting, choice of crops, preparation of soil, cultivation and irrigation are discussed in successive sections and there are many illustrations showing the proper tools and their use and tables showing depths of planting and similar details. In a foreword the department points the comparative simplicity of gardening methods and outlines the essentials as follows:

"By the exercise of care and forethought in planning succession crops and rotations and by the utilization of every foot of available space it is possible to grow considerable quantities of vegetables on limited areas and so supplement the family food supply. The principal factors in accomplishing this are the use of seed boxes and hotbeds to give plants an early start in spring before seeds may be planted outdoors, the use of outside beds to carry plants for main season crops while early crops are occupying the garden space, and the planting of later succession crops as soon as earlier plants have been removed.

"In order that gardening may be carried on successfully in such an intensive way, it is especially important that the soil of good texture be available and that it be well supplied with humus and plantfood. It is essential, also as in all gardening, that sufficient moisture be present, that the garden be kept free of weeds and that the soil be cultivated frequently and well."

Major League Infielder Expected to Sign With Central Leaguers

GET SHORTSTOP JONES OF ST. LOUIS OUTFIT

Several New Players Signed for Try With Fort Wayn Club.

Several more players have been signed for workouts with the Fort Wayne Central leaguers and will show up for service tomorrow. Of those who are hooked up, there are Kelly, a long first sacker of class, and Lang, a portside hurler secured from Kansas City. One more player remains to be cinched and he is practically certain. This is Shortstop Jones, who has been with the St. Louis Nationals in training camp and has just been released.

When Jones signed with St. Louis it was with the understanding that if he did not make the team he would be turned loose to go where he pleased. In the training camp he worked out against a veteran and failed to make his place. Now he has accepted terms with Vandy's club and all that remains is to get his signed documents.

Training season opens up Monday and already the players are beginning to flock in. One of them will not be here, however, it being Plaxico, who has been called to join his regiment of the South Carolina national guards. The bosses have announced that during training anyone who wishes to watch the club work out will be admitted to the grandstand.

Exhibition games start a week from Sunday when the club divided into two sections, playing Mart Cleary's Lincoln Life club here and the Anderson club at Anderson. The following Sunday they again divide and play the Insurance men here and Kendallville. This will be blue envelope day, for at midnight following the two games the club starts for Evansville. Sixteen men will be carried for the first two weeks. On the way to the opening of the season games will be played at Vincennes on Monday, April 30; Lawrenceville, Ill., May 1, and Mount Carmel, Ill., May 2.

(By Paul Purman.)

Hughie Jennings, of the Detroit Tigers, has more than one reason for favoring a more stringent interpretation of the balk rule as applied to pitchers.

In the first place Jennings has Ty Cobb, perhaps the greatest base runner in the world, on his ball team; he has Donie Bush, Veach and a number of other sprinters, but this is not the main reason Jennings has an antipathy for the way the umpires read the rules today.

A few months ago I asked major league baseball managers to give me their opinions on changes in the rules to permit more batting and base running. At that t me I received a letter from Jennings stating his position firmly. He favored a one foul strike rule and also an order to umpires to make them more drastic in their interpretation of the present balk rules.

Jennings declares that base runners are thwarted in their efforts to steal second by false motions of pitchers. He believes that a pitcher should be penalized for a balk every time he mawes a false motion, whether it is with his arms, shoulders or feet—any motion, in fact, which is inclined to deceive the base runner.

Jennings objects particularly to the southpaw pichers. Many of them, he says, face the plate directly and then throw the ball to first base as a base runner is taking a lead off on the sack.

In support of his theory Jennings cites the example of the old Baltimore Orioles.

For three consecutive years four men on that ball club stole about 250 bases a year. They were Jennings himself, McGraw, Joe Kelly and Willie Keeler. In the fourth year the average went above 280 when Jack Doyle joined the club. Jennings' theory is supported by the following figures, which shows what base stealing was in the American league last year:

The Detroit club stole 131 bases, Cobb copping 68, Veach 24, Young 20, and Bush 19.

The St. Louis club led the league in stolen bases with 146, the fleet Cuban, Marsans, pilfered 46, Shoton was second with 41, George Sisler had 34, and Miller 25.

Chicago stole 116 bases. Collins lead the club with 40, Jackson had 24, and Weaver 22. The surprising thing was with the Chicago club that a catcher, Schalk, was second with 30 steals.

Cleveland stole an even hundred bases, Speaker leading with 35. Roth stole 29, Chapman 21, and Turner 15.

Washington was next with 98. Milan pulled the larceny game 34 times, Shank and Foster were tied with 23, and Joe Judge had 18.

The Athletics stole 95 bases, Walsh leading with 30, Strunk had 21, and Witt 19.

The New York record was 78 stolen bases. Magee stole 29, Peckinpaugh 17, and Gilhooley and Pipp 16 each.

One of the mysteries of the league was that the Boston Red Sox, American league and national champions, stole less bases than any club in the league. They only copped 69. Hooper lead with 27, Lewis had 16, Dixie Walker 14, and Gardner 12.

There was not a club in the league with but two exceptions that stole as many bases as the four men on the old Orioles stole back in the 90's.

COLLEGE ATHLETICS WOULD HELP COUNTRY

Army Officers Advise Schools to Retain All Their Sports.

In the first flush of excitement following the declaration of war, a number of colleges decided to give up athletic sports. The spirit of this action was no doubt commendable, but rather hasty as shown by the statements of a number of army officers a few days later, who advised colleges to retain their athletics and to add a certain amount of military drill.

There is no question about the patriotism of American colleges. Undergraduates have flocked to the colors in every war we have been in. Some of the larger colleges sent complete battalions during the civil war.

Army officers recognize this spirit of patriotism, but they also realize that while these young men are in college, before they are called to the front that they will be better prepared for military service if they continue their athletic activities.

Military training added to the regular course of college athletics is bound to aid in physical development. Baseball players who have participated in military drills during the training season are unanimous in their opinion that they have been benefied.

When the call comes for these college youths they will go.

Athletics and military drill combined will only make them more fitted for the work Uncle Sam will have laid out for them.

SHOP LEAGUERS HOLD FIRST WORKOUT TODAY

All Clubs But One Post Forfeits at Friday Night Meeting.

Initial workouts for Industrial Baseball League clubs were held this afternoon, with the five clubs now in all scheduled to practice. The Pennsy and Turner clubs used Lawton park, General Elcetric used Foster park, Dudlos used Swinney park and Bowser worked at Weisser.

At the meeting held in The Sentinel office last evening all clubs but the Western Gas came through with forfeit money. The Gasmen were not represented at the meeting and will probably be left in the cold. It is understood that the Federation of Labor will put in an outfit to fill out the circuit. The Wayne Oil Tanks who, earlier in the season, applied for admittance to the Industrial league, were not mentioned with regards to the vacancy, although it was understood that they were ready to post forfeit money at the first meeting.

Reports from the committee in charge of the dance held at the Moose hall last Wednesday, showed that the affair was a decided success, the financial end working out much better than was expected. The league will be well equipped when it comes to money matters this year and with this assured final arrangements can be made for the opening.

The next meeting of managers will be hel dat the home of Harry Cashdollar, 1436 Wells street, Saturday evening, April 21. Before this time all persons who wish to act as scorekeepers and umpires and who are qualified to hold the jobs are asked to communicate with the president, Frank O'Brien, telephone 6843.

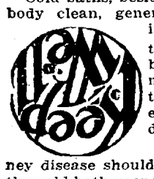
RELIGION, TEMPERANCE AND HEALTH

TO YOUR GOOD HEALTH.

Daily Bath and Rubbing Tone Skin and Prevent Colds.

There is no excuse now for shirking the daily bath—cold or merely tepid.

Cold baths, besides helping keep the body clean, generally are beneficial in the case of certain nervous troubles. They must never be too cold or too prolonged or the effects are apt to be depressing.



Sufferers from kidney disease should be very careful on the cold bath proposition, though. Frequently an increase in albuminuria has been noticed after them.

Getting the skin accustomed to the action of cold water is one ofthe best ways to prevent colds. Rubbing the skin with a coarse, wet towel until the skin glows, especially the chest and the extremities, is a good way to accomplish it.

To prevent catching cold after a bath a reaction of the skin is necessary. This is best attained by a rough towel or by vigorous rubbing of the body with a hard brush.

Massage is an excellent addition to bathing. It increases the circulation through the skin and muscles.

In addition to the daily cold bath or rubdown a hot bath should be taken once or twice a week. This bath had best be taken by first using water of the highest temperature that can be borne. Those who can stand it might continue to add hot water until the skin is quite red.

Abundant perspiration will then appear on the face, head and neck. After having perspired freely, cold water should be drawn into the bath until the tub has become quite cool.

Hot baths of long duration are especially useful in the case of kidney diseases or as a preventive of such. It is important to make sure that one's heart and blood vessels are in good condition before taking them.

Keeping Fit Patriotic Act in Time of War

Keeping in good health by right living is the patriotic duty of every American. Sickness will hamper the national efficiency, whether among soldiers or non-combatants. Disease prevention is a good form of preparedness.

The mobilization of the country's agricultural products must go hand in hand with preparations for putting factories and ammunition plants on a war footing. The health of a nation depends in a large measure upon its food.

The wanton destruction of food is as much of a traitorous act as sheltering a national enemy or destroying arms and ammunition.

The housewife must be economical in the preparation of food and must cook it well, so that meals will be tasty and digestible and waste will be eliminated.

Preparedness against preventable disease should include vaccination against typhoid and smallpox.

Germany saved enough men from smallpox in the past ten years to offset her terrific losses at Verdun, according to health experts.

Fewer men were killed in the armies of the north and south in the civil war than have died from typhoid fever in the United States in the past ten years. Yet this disease is entirely preventable.

Reduction of the infant mortality rate will help repair the wastages of war.

Figures compiled by Canadian health officials show that the Dominion's losses since the European war started are considerably less than the loss from preventable disease at home during the same period.

The repopulation of a country after war depends largely upon the vigor with which health officials prosecute a campaign against preventable disease.

Short Sermon to Parents

(The Evangel.)

"And that their children, who have not known, may hear and learn to fear Jehovah your God."

Have you ever seriously considered, dear parent, that your child is altogether dependent upon you for every moral and spiritual truth? As the child mind gradually unfolds and God becomes a factor, your love and self-sacrifice and ways are the only forces that help to form a true idea of God in the soul. There is no earthly influence greater. The physician and the minister are the closest and most confidential friends in your family life, but they cannot take your place. To the child mind you are supreme. As you live, so God lives. As you love or hate, so God loves or hates. God is unerringly interpreted in your life. You are to the child mind the logos of God.

Mark the words of the text: "And that their children, who have not known." There are parents who shut God out from the life of their child. They do not mean to do it. It is a negative crime.

Their ambitions toward the child are most excellent. The very best linguist and the most modern dancing master are secured. The child is taught everything that modern conditions include, except religion. God is not known. There are thousands of children in America who know as little about God as the darkest child in Africa. They never hear God's name in reverence. They are taught nothing of his word. They never kneel before him. And the total responsibility rests upon the parent.

"And that their children may hear and learn to fear Jehovah your God." How may this be accomplished? Remember that nothing can take the place of the home. You cannot substitute Sunday school or church. The supreme duty of the parent is to present to the child the name of Jehovah, that he may be feared.

Dear parent, so teach your child that the name of Jehovah may be revered. That is at once your highest responsibility and greatest privilege.

MAKING OPPORTUNITIES

(By Helen M. Richardson.)

"I wish I could find an opportunity to call on our new neighbor," said young Mrs. Horton to her Aunt Eunice, who sat in a rocker beside the gas stove, while her niece was busy ironing.

Aunt Eunice had just arrived and had promised to make a "good long visit." From "way out West" to far "down East" was a distance too long to be traversed without quite an interval of rest between the journeys.

"Do you have to 'find' opportunities here in the East? In the West we usually make them," Aunt Eunice observed with a twinkle in her eye.

Her niece, looking up quickly, caught it, and replied with an attempt at humor: "Well, yes, Aunt Eunice, we are often obliged to hunt far and long for opportunities here in the East—we really do. You accomplish such wonderful stunts out West, though, that I really can not doubt your assertion about 'making' them, but I'd really like to hear how you do it."

"Why, we do it something after this fashion. If a stranger moves into the neighborhood we don't wait to get our washing and ironing and baking, and a thousand and one other hindrances out of the way, before extending to her 'the right hand of fellowship.' We drop everything and run right over, if it is only for five minutes; tell her how glad we are she has come to live among us, and then go home and tidy up. It doesn't hinder half as much as you think it will when you stop to consider ways and means, and before you know it, almost, you have done a friendly act, and your work has scarcely missed you."

Before Aunt Eunice had ceased speaking her sprightly niece had smoothed her ruffled hair, whisked off her apron, turned off the gas and stood waiting for her aunt's closing words.

"If you don't mind staying alone for a while, auntie, I'll follow your instructions and 'make' by first opportunity," she remarked whimsically. "Guess it is about as easy to 'make' as to 'find,'" she averred. And before Aunt Eunice had recovered from her surprise her niece was half way across the street.

THE ESSENTIAL POWER.

History is more reliable as an interpreter than theology; theology speculates, history records. Jesus said, "And ye shall received power after that the Holy Ghost has come upon you." He had a great work to commit to unfit hands; an uncompleted work to leave to "unlearned and ignorant men." They were to receive power. Not a power to work miracles; not a power to organize men for service; not a power of learning, in all of which the world has grown weary in vain efforts at redemption, says J. F. Burnett, in the Herald of Gospel Liberty.

These unfit men waited ten days, during which they prayed, and then the power came; it filled their hearts and rested in lambent flame and quivering force upon all their lives.

Out there in the temple area is a surging multitude of men, of the same sort which made up the mob around Pilate's judgment seat. These power-filled men tell them plainly and without apology that they had crucified the sent of heaven, and that his blood stained their garments. Why did not that crowd cry—Away with these men. Crucify them, as we did their Master? Instead of that hissing, hateful cry, which had rent the air but fifty days before, a head goes down here, a sob breaks forth there, and the whole vast throng is convulsed with sorrow, and cries out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" And the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. Two churches were now in Jerusalem; the one with millions of members and a magnificent temple in which to worship, the other a little company of three thousand souls, without temple, history, or ritual. The masses believed in the church that worshiped in the temple, but the power was in the church of Pentecost.

The church that had no living Christ was doomed; its house was desolate, and its power gone. The wealth of the world was at the disposal of the one; poverty marked the other.

Yet the one with temple and wealth and prestige ceased; the one with power increased.

In the light of this historic event we can understand why the Master dared to leave his uncompleted work in hands so unfit to receive it. They could not be fit until the Holy Ghost had come upon them. Had they undertaken to write the life of our Lord before Pentecost, we would have had more curious details, but the living gospel would have been wanting.

Who knows the number of such biographies that may have been written and have perished along with the powerless, Holy Ghostless sermons that have been preached.

BILLY SUNDAY TRYING OLD-TIME RELIGION TO SAVE NEW YORK, GRAVEYARD OF PREACHERS

New York, April 14.—Can Billy Sunday make good in New York?

His critics have been saying New York will be his Waterloo, and that what got across elsewhere would not go here.

But even Billy himself thought the same thing a couple of years ago, and frankly fought shy of an evangelistic campaign in the world's biggest city.

And yet Sunday has been literally forced into the fight in New York. He has been drawn into it in spite of himself and "Ma," for "Ma" Sunday feared this big town as much as Billy did and she did all she could, at one time, to keep him out of it.

But Billy Sunday is here—his great revival opened this week—and he's going to have the fight of his life—and he knows it. And New York will also know it before he gets through.

Billy believes that forces which have been opposing him in his campaigns in other cities are to make a united attack upon him here, and that they have raised a fund of half a million dollars to discredit him not only with the public, but with the church people.

I have often heard Sunday use the picturesque language for which he is famous, but when, in his first address, he paid his respects to the crowd that is after his scalp, for the first time since I've heard him, he hesitated because even his choice vocabulary did not contain words numerous and forceful enough to characterize the men he was "trimming."

Standing on top of his little pulpit he dared them to come on and do their "dirtiest."

The way Sunday proposes to do this is not by preaching a "new gospel." In his very first address, delivered to 20,000 people, he declared:

"I bring you nothing new. I'm an old-fashioned preacher of the old-religion. I have no use for the doctrine of the universal Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man."

And when "Rody," Sunday's leader of the music, sang his first solo, he selected one about the "old-fashioned faith," in which he warned his hearers to "flee from the terrors of hell."

"This world is going to hell so fast she's breaking the speed limit," said Sunday.

Here, then, is the kyenote of this greatest of modern evangelistic campaigns in America's biggest city. It's the old-time religion that "was good enough for mother," and which its exponents say "is good enough for me."

And the most experienced "observer"—theological professors, social workers, church officials, professors of psychology—are watching the campaign with critical eye, not necessarily opposed to it, but intensely interested in learning how the message and the method which got across in other cities will get across in what is everywhere admitted to be the hardest city in America to reach with any kind of campaign.

Sunday made his first big hit with the crowd when he said that after his workers are paid and all legitimate expenses are met, every dollar of the "free-will offering" will go to the work of the Red Cross society and the army workers of the Young Men's Christian association.

It will be interesting to watch the outcome of this battle royal during the next three months. Next to the war, it will be the biggest feature engaging the attention of the metropolis.

More than this, the Sunday campaign will attract the attention of the Christian forces of the world, because this is the most highly organized and in some respects the most important evangelistic campaign conducted in the recent history of the church.

Back of the campaign are some of the most prominent and successful business men in this country. They are putting into it all the genius that made their own enterprises stand out in the commercial world.

Actively engaged as committeemen and special workers are some of the best known religious leaders on two hemispheres.

I saw on the platform at the opening meeting men who are famous the world over. And way back at the rear, scarcely observed even by those near him, modestly sat John D. Rockefeller, jr., who, with several other men of great wealth, are members of the committee responsible for the Billy Sunday campaign.

Whatever the genius of experts would furnish or money could buy, which was regarded as necessary to make his campaign win, has been supplied.

And so New York, which has been called "The Graveyard of Preachers," because almost every minister of prominence who came here to "save New York" has soon been buried out of sight—New York, which listened for a few days to Dowie of Zion City, then luaghed and forgot him—New York, which caused even Moody, the greatest evangelist of the last generation, to seem to have finally lost his grip—New York, the city to which everybody wants to go before they go to heaven—New York has Billy Sunday to see if he cannot "save it from hell."

MILK, NOT BEER.

(Portland, Ore., Telegram.)

Another illustration of the withering influence of prohibition on Oregon industry is afforded in the sale of a large Portland brewery plant to an important dairying concern which will at once convert the closed establishment into huge condensary. About 75 per cent of the former brewing plant was found to be available for condensing milk. The extensive refrigerating section will require little or no improvement or alteration.

Viewed merely as an agency for promoting the development of Oregon industries how does a condensed milk concern compare with a brewery? Is milk as valuable a product as hops or barley? Does a brewery employ more labor all the year round? Is an industry which turns a stream of "outside" money into the state a more valuable asset to the state than an industry which cuts continually into the wages of laboring men for a very expensive but worthless luxury?

Taking another view is it not a matter for public congratulation that a brewery which manufactured a very inferior and costly food (a few scientists assert that beer contains nourishment while other scientists dispute the claim) should be supplanted by an industry that puts out the best food in the world? The Telegram would like to see every idle brewery in Oregon and Washington converted into a condensed milk plant.

Wasting Children.

"The cruel waste of child-life is largely traceable to the drink habit," says Dr. Mary D. Sturge, a widely known British writer on medical and scientific matters. "The drink habit causes semi-starvation to thousands of growing children. It is a potent cause of miscarriage and other failures of the germ cell to mature into a perfect child. It encourages the ravages of syphilis and gonorrhea, those arch-enemies of the race. An increase in the consumption of beer and spirits is always marked by an increase in the infant death rate."

Print of the Nails.

(Westminster Teacher.)

It may not be easy to give such marks of the Shepherd's voice as to enable the Christian to know infallibly whether the solicitations that come to him are indeed from Christ. But there are certain characteristics which always distinguish His calls. There is a story that once there came to the cell of a saintly monk one who knocked and asked for admittance. His mien was lordly and majestic. "Who art thou?" asked the saint. "I am Jesus," was the answer. There was something in the voice and manner of the visitor, however, which made the monk suspect that he was not the Holy One he claimed to be. "Where is the print of the nails?" he asked. Instantly the stranger turned and fled away. It was Satan—not Christ. Nothing is of Christ which does not bear this mark.

He Read the Bible

President John Quincy Adams, known as the "Old Man Eloquent," who attributed his powers of expression to the habit of reading the Bible through every year, by devoting to it the first fifteen minutes of each day, giving his soul regularly a breakfast of Bible truth before he fed his body, said: "I speak as a man of the world to men of the world; and I say to you, search the Scriptures. The Bible is the book of all others to be read at all ages, and in all conditions of human life; not to be read once or twice or thrice through, and then laid aside, but to be read in small portions of one or two chapters every day, and never to be intermitted, unless by some overruling necessity."

We may think we are truly busy when we are really only restless, and a little studied retirement would greatly enrich our returns. We are great only as we are God-possessed; and scrupulous appointments in the upper room with the Master will prepare us for the toil and hardships of the most strenuous campaign.—J. H. Jowett.

Faith's Simplicity.

(St. Louis Christian Advocate.)

A young man, distressed about his soul, confided in a friend. The friend said: "Did you ever learn to float?" "Yes, I did," was the surprised reply. "And did you find it easy to learn?" "Not at first," he answered. "What was the difficulty?" his friend pursued. "Well, the fact was I could not lie still; I could not believe or realize that the water would hold me up without any effort of my own, so I always began to struggle, and, of course, down I went at once." "And then?" "Then I found out that I must give up the struggle, and just rest on the strength of the water to bear me up. It was easy enough after that; I was able to lie back in the fullest confidence that I should never sink." "And is not God's Word more worthy of your trust than the changeable sea? He does not bid you wait for feelings. He commands you to rest in Him, to believe His Word, and accept His gift."

A PRAYER.

One day when a great convention of lawyers and constitution writers was assembled in New York, the chaplain was unexpectedly absent.

The president of the assembly was the Honorable Elihu Root. Without a moment's hesitation he arose and offered an impromptu prayer. He could not have thus prayed had it not been his habit to pray. No man, no matted what his intelligence, can pray intelligently in public on the spur of the moment without long practice.

The drowning man never learns to swim. Here is Mr. Root's prayer. What an effect it would have if many men were praying this same prayer with sincerity.

"Almighty God, guide us in our deliberations. Make us humble and devoted to the public service. Make us wise and considerate of the feelings, the opinions and the rights of others. Make us effective and useful for the advancement of Thy cause of peace and justice and liberty of the world."

JEALOUSY AND SLANDER.

(Rev. Madison C. Peters, D. D., in the Watchman and Examiner.)

Jealousy is the acknowledgment of inferiority, the ungracious compliment paid to excellence.

Jealousy is a frenzy that cannot endure even in idea the good of others.

The prosperity that surrounds others pains jealous eyes more than the meridian rays of the sun.

The mention of a successful rival's name throws some folks into convulsions, and like the cuttle fish they emit their black venom to darken the clear waters that surround their more prosperous neighbor.

The poets imagined that envy dwelt in a dark cave, pale and lean, looking asquint, abounding with gall, her teeth black, never rejoicing but in the misfortune of others, ever unquiet and continually tormenting herself.

Don't groan when others shout.

Don't grow uncomfortable as others grow happy.

Instead of fretting that others are preferred before you in honor or estate, in gifts or usefulness, bless God for their influence.

What if others are more popular than you are? What if others are wiser? Be thankful that there is one star in the firmament above yourself.

What if others have the praise of men, while you have the bitter root to chew? Praise God that there is somebody not troubled as you are.

As birds peck most at the best fruit, so the worthiest persons are often most slandered.

Slander would starve and die if nobody took it in and gave it lodging.

There are so many open mouths because there are so many open ears.

If you listen to a story, false or true, you are equally guilty with the one who tells it, and, as an old writer says, "you ought both to be hung, the one by the law and the other by the tongue."

Business is business, but the best kind of business is to mind your own business, and the reason why those people succeed so well who mind their own business is because there is so little competition.

The work of the masculine gad-about is mainly with the embarrassments of business.

You sell your automobile because you have no use for it. The envious peddler of nux vomica utters some suspicions in regard to your credit. "He sold his machine; I guess he had to sell it. I think he is going down. I wonder if he can stand the pressure?"

A suspicion gets started, and everybody wants his money right away. Though your assets are four times your liabilities, crash! Everything goes! Men are whispered into bankruptcy every day.

Don't employ yourself in discovering others' faults. Look for your own.

The man who never made a mistake is a myth.

If you look through a telescope in the usual way it magnifies the object seen; reverse it and the large and near seems small. Men often look at their own faults through one end, and at their neighbor's faults through the other.

When you catch yourself making a detracting remark, say something approving in the same breath, and you will soon be cured of slander.

Don't be hasty to credit evil reports. They are generally the result of misunderstanding, of evil design, of envy, or they proceed from an exaggerated and partial disclosure of the facts.

Wait and learn the whole story before you decide, and believe no more than the evidence compels you, and then preserve loving silence.

(Emma Thorp Hale.)

How easy it is to grow discouraged "when life's perils thick confound us." How hard to be hopeful and happy at such times. Yet we should not feel discouraged or hopeless, for God is the same kind Father in times of gloom that he is when all is bright. He is just as near, though we may not be as conscious of his presence, as at other times. Sometimes he seems even nearer in our times of distress, for he sees our sore need and stands ready to succor.

If we could only feel the assurance of his love at all times, and it is our privilege to do so, we would not go about with gloom in our hearts because we are denied the blessings that we crave, or are called on to bear heavy burdens.

God loves us—loves us in bright days, loves us during the gloomy night, loves us always.

With infinite patience, he waits for us to learn the lesson he would teach us; never faltering in his loving purpose for us, even though we murmur and complain. Yet, even though we cry to him for relief, he, with steady purpose, yet in greatest tenderness, gives us the hard lesson to learn. Through blinding tears, oftentimes, we puzzle over the weighty problem, while watching, encouraging and guiding the great Teacher keeps us to our task. When we have learned our lesson, and have seen the purpose of it all, we are ready to thank him that he kept us to it. We rejoice that he did not stop our crying. Some of us stay in life's kindergarten a long time, because we are such dull pupils, and will not apply our hearts unto wisdom. We would rather gaze idly about, or take the valuable moments for playing than to plunge into the difficulties and conquer them.

Oh, that we may be apt pupils, learning life's lessons as they come to us, asking God's guidance and wisdom in all our ways. Some day he shall say, "Come up higher;" and then all the vexing problems, all the perplexing lessons shall no more vex us, for he shall teach us all the mysteries of his kingdom, and show us all that we did not understand while here below.

Let us take courage and apply ourselves to wisdom with fresh vigor. Let us take up the task that lies before us, resolved to conquer all the difficulties. We shall have all eternity in which to understand God's dealings with us. We shall grieve no more over the burdens and difficulties for there will be none. In heaven's clear light we shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known, and our voices shall be raised in joyful praise to him who loved us, and gave himself for us.

COMING TO THE MAJESTIC MONDAY NIGHT.

New York Winter Garden's Pretty Girls in "A World of Pleasure."

IN THE THEATERS

AT THE MAJESTIC.

"A WORLD OF PLEASURE."

New York Winter Garden's Display of Beauty and Fashion Monday.

While it is not advertised as a fashion show, "A World of Pleasure," the huge Winter Garden spectacle coming to the Majestic next Monday evening, offers as a very important feature of its colossal entertainment a gorgeous array of the very latest gowns in a manner to fill the hearts of the fair members of the audience with envy and longing. While Winter Garden productions have always been noted for their costuming, of recent years woman's attire applicable to ordinary street usage has become a decided feature. In many of the cities in which this latest one, "A World of Pleasure," has been offered to the public, designers and women in private life have industriously copied the extremely fashionable gowns worn by the stately and beautiful show girls. In odrer to keep the production in the matter of costuming right up to the very last second, complete changes of wardrobe have been made by the management at frequent intervals, for while this involves a tremendous expense, the direectors of the Winter Garden knowing full well the value of feminine interest, have considered the expenditure well worth while.

Nor have they been lax in the selection of their living models. New York's beauty market has been ransacked for the fairest type of the chorus girl. Even when on tour the high standard of excellence has been maintained, and hundreds of dollars have been expended in railroad fares for the transportation of these beauties from the Broadway central market to the cities in which the attraction will appear.

But beauty, fashion, scenic equipment and melody are not the only features worthy of praise in this tremendous entertainment. A cast of stars which reads for all the world like an announcement of a metropolitan benefit is added to the foregoing attractions. And after all of the above excellent features are exploited one must not forget the splendid special orchestra which so delightfully interprets the many haunting melodies found in the score of this pleasing entertainment. It is one of the noteworthy pleasures of the show.

UNCLE SAM'S NAVAL HEROES.

DAVID G. FARRAGUT.

David Glasgow Farragut is the naval hero of the civil war, the hero of Mobile bay and the man who opened the Mississippi to commerce for the northern states.

Farragut was born at Campbell's station, near Knoxville, Tenn., July 5, 1801, the son of Maj. George Farragut, a veteran of the revolution. He received an early naval training and became midshipman at the age of 9. He took part in the capture of prizes during the war with England in 1812.

During his stay in the navy, Farragut added to his education, ending with a lecture course at Yale. He was in charge of several ships and navy yards, until the civil war, when he was put in command of the expedition to capture New Orleans and open the Mississippi.

With a fleet of 48 vessels, Farragut gained the mouth of the Mississippi and pushed up until he got between Forts Jackson and St. Philip. A heavy chain was stretched across the river, torpedoes were planted in the channel and fire rafts awaited the wooden ships.

An officer told Farragut of the chain and torpedoes.

"Damn the torpedoes!" Farragut replied and, turning to his pilot, commanded, "Go ahead"

Forming into two lines, the fleet moved up toward the chains, then putting on all steam possible they shot forward. The fire rafts were lighted and set adrift among Farragut's ships, both forts showered the fleet with shot and torpedoes were exploding.

But Farragut's ships passed the forts ,then the torpedo field and finally broke through the chains.

On April 25, 1862, Farragut captured New Orleans with a loss of 37 killed, 47 wounded and one gunboat lost. Three days later Farragut ran the batteries of Vicksburg and the whole river was open.

Next July Farragut was made rear admiral, in which position he won the battle of Mobile bay, on Aug. 5, 1864. He became vice admiral Dec. 22, 1864, by special act of congress, and admiral next year in the same way. He died Aug. 4, 1870.

COUNCIL ON MILITARY AND NAVAL AFFAIRS

Organization Formed After Address Delivered by H. H. Merrick, of Chicago.

Patriotism glowed in the hearts of everyone who heard the address given Friday evening by H. H. Merrick, of Armour and Co., Chicago, to the members of the Quest club and guests at the Anthony hotel. Fired by this enthusiasm a council on military and naval affairs was formed to which twenty-six organizations in the city informally pledged their support.

This new body is to serve largely as a clearing house for patriotic movements and enterprises. This body will prevent the duplication of such meetings and events. All organizations in the city are asked to co-operate in the movement.

W. H. Scheiman of the Quest club and Real Estate exchange, was named president and Charles R. Lane, temporary secretary. A meeting scheduled for Monday noon at the Commercial club has been called at which time the organization will be perfected.

Mr. Merrill's address on "Organization" was an interesting one in every respect and he imparted information pointing out the immediate need of preparedness or in other words organization. He stated that it was not because we do not know how that it has not been done because Yankee ingenuity is greater than German.

He concluded by saying:

"I think we have cause to praise the Lord on high because He has led us into higher things, where ideals count, where the future will daze the conception of the brotherhood of man, when the things Washington stood for will be given some weight, when we stand in the war of sixteen nations as the leaders, and that our sons and daughters will know no flag so dear, as the dear old flag I see on the walls."

We will guarantee you more clothes value for the amount invested than you can possibly get elsewhere.

A boon to women troubled with superfluous hair is the new phelactine process. It is totally unlike the depilatory, electrical and other methods heretofore employed for the removal of hairy growths. It is the only thing that enables one to remove the hair completely—roots and all—in one's own home, without the assistance of an expert. The result cannot be doubted, for the user sees the hair-roots with her own eyes.

A stick of phelactine, with easy directions, can be had at any drugsore. It is entirely harmless (a child could safely eat it), odorless and non-irritaing. Always sold under a money-back guarantee. It is an instantaneous method, and so horough that the skin is left perfectly smooth and hairless, bearing not the least evidence of its former disfigurement.—Advertisement.

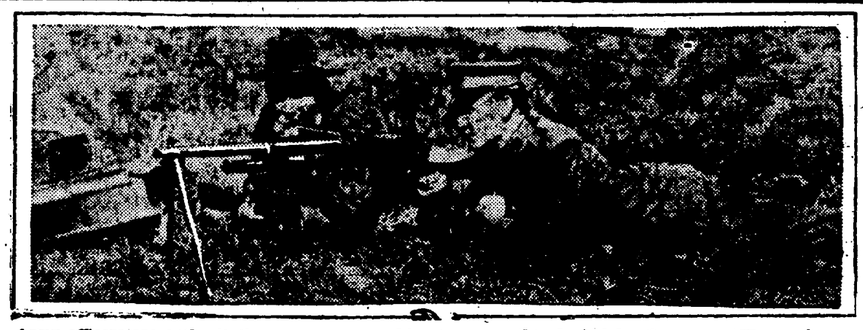
ONE MAN CAN CARRY UNCLE SAM'S LATEST MACHINE GUN.



Army officers are enthusiastic over a new machine gun recently adopted by the army. The weapon has a remarkable advantage over existing machine guns in that it is so small that it may be carried by one man and can be fired from the shoulder. Two men are necessary in the operation of the gun, one to carry extra barrels and bandoliers of ammunition. The gun is said to be free from the danger of choking and the barrels can be changed almost instantly when heated from rapid firing.

EDDYTORIUL ON "NOTHINK A TALL!"

Deer Beluvved Reeders of the Boogle, Greetings!—If when you pick up this ishue of the Bugle expeckting to read a eddytoriul on some turrible deep and scientiffick subjeck (sutch as you are generally ackustumd to reeding in this collum) we feer you will be awful disappinted becuz writink a eddytoriul on such a subjeck as that (or enny other subjeck, for that matter) is farthest from our thorts at this time.

"Why is it farthest from our thorts?" you nacherly ask, and we anser, "Thats a fair questshion." The reason its farthest from our thorts gentle and dosile reeder is that the chief reason we aint a goin to dash off a eddytoriul in this collum on this occashion is that we have raked and skraped our eddytoriul brain until its nearly raw and if it was to save our life from the gallus we cant think up enny remaining subjeck to write about that we aint alreddy wrote about in the past. Besides we have a bad cold in our head this wk. and our brain aint working very well ennyhow.

In other words the time has at last came in our eddytoriul career (& its a wonder to us that it aint come sooner) when weve got to throw up our hands in deespair and admit to our humiliashion & shame that we cant write a eddtyoriul for this ishue.

We have been expeckting to haft to make this confeshion for lo these menny yrs. but we have allus managed to stave it off until now. We repeet that we not only have been expeckting it, but we are amazed & surprised and shocked that it aint happend before this. There has been some wks when we thort to goodness that we couldnt git no subjeck under the sun whitch we haddent on some former occashion wrote a eddytoriul about, but somehow or other before the Boogle went to press we managed to think up somethink to write a eddytoriul about by a turrible mental effort.

But this wk it aint no use! We cant think of nothink—absolootely nothing. Our head dont seem to have no more idees in it for eddytoriul than a block of wood, so at last well haft to go to press with this ishue of the Bugle disgrased so to speek.

As a result youll all haft to wait until next wk for a eddytoriul, by whitch time we hope to be able to take our eddytoriul pen in hand and dash off a red hot eddytoriul about somethink or other with our ushual vim, vigger & et cettery.

Fite Twixt Lem & Seth

It All Started Becuz Lem Couldn't Git His Boots Offen His Feet! ---Exsitiug Details as Per Below!

Lem Brown our expert carpenter had a curus axident to happen to him tother day whitch was ruther pecooliar & unushual.

Lem had been repairing some fence thru a piece of swamp land on the edge of his farm betwixt the swamp and a pastchure where he keeps his cows being as the cows the wk before had went acrost into the swamp and got lost as fur as Lem was concernd, but probly the cows diddent feel lost. Anyways it was two days afore he found em in the swamp and being as they haddent been milked in that time their bags was so full of milk they was fit to bust.

Be that as it may Lem made up his mind to repair that fence and so he spent all day last Tuesday sloppin around in the mud fixin up the fence and as a result of standin in the worter his boots was wet inside and out also his feet and when Lem tried to pull his boots offen his feet about 7 p. M. that evg perparatory to retiring he was a good eal surprised and disgusted to find that they was shrunk up to sitch a degree that he couldnt pull em off by meens of the old wood bootjack whitch he has used for the past 15 yrs and whitch aint nevver failed him yit.

Lem puld & tugd and growld and grunted but he couldnt git enny of his boots off either neither foot nor tother. Mary Lems wife who was a settin by the settin room table beside the lamp reedin the bible askd Lem if he wanted her to help him pull his boots offen his feet for him, but Lem anserd her purty sharp tellin her how in Sam Hill could she expeck to be strong enuff to pull his boots for him if the bootjack couldnt do it!

Then Lem set down in a chair exosted as you mite say to rest up and git his breth so he could make a further effort with the bootjack. As Lem set there tired restin in his wet shrunk boots he dozed off and when he woked up three hours later the lamp was turned down and the clock on the mantel said 10 p. M. and he knowd his wife had went to bed and that like a blamed fool he had been sleepin there all that time when he ort to of been in bed.

His boots was now dride off some but they was pintchin his feet worsen evver so Lem he jumpd up and tride the boot jack agin determind to pull them boots off or bust in the a temt and thats whot he come tarnashion neer doing—that is busting in the atemt.

As bad luck would have it Lems foot slipd outen the bootjack and he fell over backards striking his head aginst a old chiny closet behint him and breaking out a hull glass door to say nothink of breaking considable chiny into the bargain!

It stund Lem for a minnit but when he reulised whot he had did he grabd up that bootjack and hauld off and with all his strenth he throwd it thru the sittin room winder as hard as he could slam it breakin out three lights of glass and reckin the sash like every think!

Then when Lem reulised that his quick temper had made him do more damage than ever he resorted to perfanitty and Missus Sim Hines next door who was woked up becuz he swore so loud says that she nevver lissend to sitch awful shockin langwidge in all her born days.

Jest then there was a knock come on the door of Lems front door and he went and opend it wondering who in Sam Hill would be a calling on him that time of night and what they would want?

When Lem opend the door, there stood Seth Dewberry our lion harted town constubble holdin his head in one hand and his six shooter revolver in tother!

"What in dognashion did you hit me a wallop behint the ear with that gorrammed bootjack fer?" says Seth shakin his revolver so clost under Lems nose that he could almost smell the catridges in it!

"I diddent know I hit you with no bootjack!" says Lem a good eal surprised.

"Well, you done so," says Seth very bitter "and if you dont beleeve it look at this swellin areddy behint my ear whitch is haff as big as a hens egg and I calkilate it will be as big as a goose egg when it gits al sweld up to its full size! Purty howdydoo I cant be a walkin along the st in pursoot of my dooties & gardin the lifes and homes of the cittizens of Bingville aginst desprit criminals & burglars without havin some fiend in huming form like you throw a bootjack thru a winder when Ime passin peacable and try to dash my brains out with it! Fer two cts Ide a rest you fer assalt and battery, hittin by meens of a bootjack with intent to kill, et cettery too numerus to mentchion and cast you in doorants vile in the town lockup."

"You dont need to talk quite so important under my roof!" says Lem purty snappy. "Dont fergit Seth Dewberry that this is my house and I calkilate to do purty mutch as I please when Ime inside of it even to the throwin of bootjacks outen winders and I also calkilate that other folks even constubbels cant come into my house and talk to me without considable impoonitty!"

"To who do you refer, or to me?" says Seth bristlin up and shakin his revolver closter under Lems nosen ever!

"Yes, to you, Seth Dewberry!" snarls Lem, "And if you dont take that dingbusted pistil outen my fase Ile grab it outen your hand and hit you a belt over the head with it!"

Jest then Seth to show his othoritty tride to stick the pistil a leetle mite closter to Lems fase and prodded him in the nose with it! Thereupon Lem who was alreddy mad with whot all had happend to him grabd the pistil outen Seths hand like he promisd he would & hit Seth a crack with it alongside the jaw!

Next minnit Lem & Seth both was clinchd and rasslin all over the room in a struggel to the deth figgeratively speakin. All to onct Lems foot slipd and he fell over backwards with Seth on top of him who come down so hard that he like to of squoze the life outen Lemuel who hollerd "Help! Help!" as loud as he could holler.

This woked up Mary Lems wife who had alreddy went to bed who come arunning down stairs in her nightgown & not fit to be saw in publick but when she seen Seth Dewberry a gittin the best of her Lem she grabd up the stove poker and hit him acrost the neck with it with sitch vilence that Seth jumpd up and lit outen the house like the Old Scratch was after him.

Then she tride to help Lem git them boots off but it wassent no use—they stuck on like as if they was glued and to make a long story short Lem had to go to bed with his boots on and slept in em all nite but he managed to git em offen his feet next mornink.

Seths neck is still turrible where Mary hit him with the stove poker and he says he is a going to bring suit fer damages aginst Lem for assalting a officer of the law in pursoot of his dooty, but Seth says he diddent assalt Lem being as it was his wife Mary who done so and if Seth brings soot he'll bring soot aginst him for breaking & enterng—speshially "breaking" up his furnichoor.

Personal Breefs

Nise wether we are having. Well why ortent we to have nise wether this time of yr, we ask? Were entiteld to it and if we diddent have nise wether in Aprile wed be a good eal disgusted wouldnt we? Course we would.

A stranger whose name we did not lern pasd thru our midst one day last wk or the wk before we dont now remember whitch becuz we fergot to make a note of it at the time. Come to think it over we aint shure whether a stranger did pass thru our midst or not but if our memry serves us rite we think he did.

Doc Livermore says unless business picks up in his line he'll just nacherly haft to git outen Bingville and put out his shingel as a dockter in some other live town where there is more sickness than there is in Bingville.. Doc has made this same thret before but he aint nevver carried it out becuz about the time he was reddy to leeve sickness allus increased or some epidemick or other broke out and thus the day was saved for Doc.

Missus Cy Hoskins while browsing around in a dark corner of her celler tother day found a qt glass jar of jam whitch she had put up five yrs ago and whitch she diddent know she had on hand. That evg she opend it for supper and set a dishful of it before her husband Cy who is a great hand for jam. Cy he pitchd into it like everythink and tuk a whole big tablespoonful of it into his fase before he even tasted it and found to his intense disgust that the jam was fermented and spiled and not fit to ete a tall. Cy says it tasted to him a good deal like the cement whitch he uses to patch his rubber boots and made him so sick as a dog to his stummick that he had to git up from the supper table and go out into the fresh air and after that happend he diddent want a bite of supper.

Bud Hinckley who aint quite rite in his head playd barber like our tonsorial artist Harve Hines tother day by gitting the ole fambily cat into a corner and trying to cut its hair for it with his mothers shears, but when instid of cutting the cats hair Bud cut into its tail and the cat turnd on Bud and spit in his fase and scratched him on the hand until it bled and he hollerd and bellerd for his mother to come to the rescue. In our opinyun we dont blame the cat.

Lokal Items Here & There

Old Dad Henderson our lokal wether profet says that it looks like a shower as we go to press. Well it may shower and it may not but if it dont after Old Dad saying it lookd like it, then termorrer he'll deny that he ever perdickted a shower. Thats one of Dads tricks.

The tea was a grand sucksess. There was only one think to mar the happiness of the occashion whitch was when Miss Amelia axidentally insted of pouring tea into Missus Ame Hillyers teacup poured it into her lap! Missus Hillyer was turrible mad being as she said the tea in her lap would ruin her silk skirt and besides it was hottern blazes! After Missus Hillyer had called Miss Amelia a "Cat" and several other names too numerus to mentchion she pickd up and went home maddern a wet hen.

Effective Masking of Objects By Vines and Shrubs

If There Are Unsightly Rear Views, Permanent Vines, or Groups of Shrubs Should Be Provided in Order to Hide Such Objects—If a Garden or Stable Is Near the House, Plantings Should Be Made So As to Effectively Shut These Areas From View.

(By L. C. CORBETT.)

Climbing plants meet a demand in the adornment of a place which can be filled neither by trees nor shrubs. Trees and shrubs can be used to hide unsightly objects from a distance, but vines serve the same purpose as the draperies of a garment; they mask by covering unsightly objects.

Vines have a peculiar value in decorative planting in that as a class they are shade enduring; yet many of the best decorative plants of this group thrive to perfection in full sunlight. Since many vines will thrive in partial shade as well as in full sunlight, they lend themselves well to porch and arbor decoration. A few have the power to attach themselves to bare walls, thus making them extremely useful in covering rough brick, stone, or wooden walls, giving them an effect of age, beauty, and appropriateness which can not be produced by artists and architectural materials. Two of the best vines for covering walls are the Boston ivy and the English ivy.

Vines which attach themselves to wire or wood supports and are chiefly valuable because of their covering and shading effects are the clematis, with all its varied forms, the wistaria, the trumpet flower, and the Actinidia and Akebia, both valuable cover plants. For sandy regions either as a soil binder or as an arbor or trellis cover none of the vines is more useful than the Japanese honeysuckle. There are many other good honeysuckles grown for decorative purposes, but none is more rapid-growing or freer from insect pests and fungous diseases than the Japanese honey-suckle. In this catalogue of valuable vines two more of our native vines justly merit high places—the five-fingered ivy and the bittersweet.

Annual vines may also serve a useful purpose about a new place. The perennial woody vines are slow growing, and usually make but little shade or protection during the first two or three years after planting. With annual plants, however, the case is quite different. Many annual climbing vines have a profusion of leaves, grow rapidly and luxuriantly, and afford a simple, inexpensive, yet satisfactory means of securing an immediate screen. For best results with these plants special attention to early planting, often indoors, is essential. When planting-out time arrives, place them in a rich, well-drained soil, and at all times maintain an abundant supply of moisture. Under such conditions use the moonflower, the morning-glory, the cypress vine, the hyacinth, bean, nasturtiums for low screens and lattices, and the wild cucumber for taller structures. Rustic summer houses and arbors may be very beautifully and satisfactorily adorned with coboea, or with wild cucumber, during the time which must elapse before the permanent vines can be grown sufficiently to cover the structure.

The comparative value of shrubs and perennial grasses and herbaceous annual bedding plants is at once apparent. Residents of the country or of suburban places have difficulty in securing suitable herbaceous plants in sufficient quantities to produce rich effects, and even if such plants can be obtained in profusion they can not take the place of shrubs and grasses either as cover plants or as screens or wind-breaks. A complete arrangement requires a harmonious use of both shrubs and annual herbaceous plants.

For quick results, however, where shrubs of large size can not be secured or are too expensive, a temporary effect can be produced by the use of tall-growing, broad-leaved plants, such as the castor bean, the canna, and the caladium. The castor bean grows rapidly, is easily propagated from seed, and comes true to variety, affording in one plant a wide range in color of foliage and in stature. This plant frequently grows 6 to 8 feet in height from seed, even as far north as New York, in a single season. Its broad-spreading habit, together with its attractive foliage, which in well-nourished plants is retained well down to the ground, renders the castor bean a very satisfactory makeshift or substitute for shrubbery where screens and masking masses are needed. The trouble with all such makeshifts is that they produce an effect which lasts for a few months only, while with shrubs the benefit is lasting and they serve quite as useful a purpose in the way of shelter belts and screens in winter as during the summer. For the sake of variety, the caladium and canna can be used to good advantage in connection with the castor bean. The tall habit of the canna and the broad leaves of the caladium render them well fitted for massing. Such plants as the castor bean, the canna, and the caladium can be used to good purpose in shrub borders and masking groups before the shrubs are sufficiently grown to produce the effect desired. Even after the shrubs have grown sufficiently to accomplish the end sought an occasional mass of castor beans, asters, eulalias, or arundo interspersed at intervals will lend variety and life to the groups.

There are several varieties of shrubs that can be planted on the farm-yard lawn which will greatly enhance the beauty of the place. One of the most graceful of these is the Weeping Mulberry, which will produce a perfect mountain of foliage. Its long branches fall to the ground on all sides, completely hiding the trunk of the shrub. The Golden Syringa and Golden Elder are so attractive, and both grow very rapidly. Feathery Hemlocks are also desirable shrubs to have in the yard. Every farmer should have some shrubbery. After it has once been installed in the yard it will prove its worth and command as much attention as any other branch of outdoor gardening.

In addition to a well-executed general planting plan the successful development of a place depends on the preparation and fertilization of the soil, the pruning and planting of trees and shrubs, and the making and maintenance of a greensward.

The nature of the plantations upon a city lot or suburban place is such that the main part of the cultivation must necessarily be done before the plantations are made. The soil should be thoroughly pulverized, brought to a general grade, and the surface smoothed and raked with a steel-tooth rake. If a lawn is to be made, the grass seed should be sown immediately after the raking, and then the surface thoroughly compacted by the use of a heavy lawn roller. Fertilizers for the lawn should be free from weed seed and be of a lasting nature. If the soil is heavy it can be improved by plowing in a crop of cowpeas or Canada field peas. If this can not be done, the next best plan is to use thoroughly composted or sterilized stable manure. If the soil is naturally light its store of plant food can be augmented with bone meal. This should not be plowed under, but harrowed in at the time of preparing the soil.

The critical period in the life of a plant is when it is transplanted from the nursery to its permanent location. In moving trees from the nursery a portion of the root area is lost, and the top should be reduced in proportion to the loss of root area, in order that the newly transplanted and unestablished plant may be able to secure sufficient moisture and food to supply the demands of the top. The roots should also be pruned, so as to protect them against decay, by cutting away all broken and mutilated parts, leaving the cut surfaces smooth and in such position that they will come in contact with the fresh earth. After the plant becomes established certain branches will grow more rapidly than others and the appearance of the plant will be spoiled by this unequal growth. Pruning should, therefore, be resorted to in order to preserve a symmetrical development of the plant without rendering it artificial or formal in appearance. Care should also be exercised during the early development of a plant to maintain a uniform distribution of branches around the central axis, if it be a tree, so as to insure a symmetrical and pleasing form at maturity.

At planting time the excavation prepared for the reception of the tree should be of sufficient depth to allow it to be set as deep as it stood in the nursery and large enough to accommodate the roots without bending them, while the earth in the bottom of the hole should be loosened at least one spade length below the general floor of the hole. In replacing the soil over the roots of the plant, a thin layer of earth should be placed immediately in contact with the roots and thoroughly pressed down by trampling in order to bring the particles of soil in close contact with the feeding roots of the plant. The hole should then be filled and the surface left slightly above the general surface of the surrounding ground.

The bays of curved walks and drives should be filled with groups of shrubs, so that if there be no natural object for the road to make a curve around, the plantation will serve as a substitute for one, and in so doing produce one of the highest effects which can be secured in landscape gardening. By a judicious use of plants in the bays of walks and drives new and unexpected features in the form of vistas, lawn pieces, or specimen plants can be brought before the observer, thus producing pleasant surprises and holding his interest. The plantations show variety as well as serve the purpose of marking the walk.

The Reasons For Buying and Using Fertilizers

The Permanent Building Up of the Soil is the Most Important Reason—A West Virginia Authority, Who is Helping Solve the Soil Problem of That State, Tells How This May Be Brought About—Some Important Fertilizer Facts.

(By R. M. SALTER.)

The most fertile soils become unproductive when crops are grown continuously and removed from the land. Such exhaustion can be prevented only by returning to the soil the elements of fertility taken off in the crops. During the past year the farmers of West Virginia have used 46,010 tons of fertilizer, at a cost of over $1,000,000, in an effort to maintain or increase the fertility of the soils of the state. Two questions arise: 1. Has this money been invested to the best advantage? 2. May we expect profitable returns from a still larger use of fertilizers?

A study of the records of fertilizer sales shows that several thousand tons of the fertilizers used were of very low grade. By low grade fertilizers we mean fertilizers containing only small amounts of plant food materials, often in very unavailable forms. It costs as much to mix, bag, ship, and apply a ton of fertilizer containing garbage tankage as it does one containing nitrate of soda, but garbage tankage may be of very doubtful fertilizing value. To get the most fertilizing value per dollar invested we must use high grade materials.

One fact stands out prominently in the fertilizer sales record for last year. Over one-half of the fertilizer used in this state was acid phosphate. The use of so large a proportion of phosphate fertilizer may be taken to indicate two things: first, that farmers are realizing more than ever the advisability of securing their nitrogen by growing legumes and taking proper care of the manure; and second, that they find it more profitable to insure a supply of available potash by maintaining the content of organic matter in the soil than by purchasing it in the form of fertilizer.

The growth of plants, like that of animals, requires a supply of certain food materials. Plants obtain a part of their food from the air and the remainder from the soil. Since the composition of the air changes but little, differences in productivity may be attributed to differences in the supply of those food materials which the plant obtains from the soil. Careful investigations have shown that those substances which may become exhausted in a soil to such an extent as to limit crop growth are five in number. They are limestone, organic matter, nitrogen, potash, and phosphoric acid. Lack of drainage, improper cultivation, and poor seed also contribute to low crop yields.

The principal value of lime in a soil arises from its ability to keep the soil sweet. It does this by neutralizing the acids which are being continually formed through the decay of organic matter and the decomposition of soil minerals.

Long before man attempted to grow crops artificially Nature had solved the problem of soil conservation and soil improvement. By Nature's system the crops that grow each year are returned to the soil. Here they decay, liberating the plant food which they contain and stocking the soil with organic matter. This process accounts for the high productivity of virgin soils.

Organic matter furnishes food for bacteria. These bacteria render available the plant food contained in the plant residues and incidentally hasten the liberation of plant food from soil minerals. Organic matter exerts a marked influence on the physical nature of soils. It loosens the texture of clay soils, makes better drainage and aeration possible, prevents clodding, and renders them more easily worked. It improves the water-holding capacity of sandy soils, making them less subject to drought, and increases their ability to retain readily available forms of plant food.

Organic matter cannot be purchased economically. We can increase the organic matter in the soil by raising crops and returning to the land the crops themselves or the manure produced when they are fed. Greater effort should be made to have more vegetable matter to plow under. Corn stubble, corn stalks, weeds, cover crops of rye or crimson clover, when added to the soil, make it more productive.

All plants require nitrogen for their growth. There is more nitrogen contained in the air over an acre of land than would be required to grow a million crops of corn. Unfortunately this nitrogen is not in a form available to plants. Crops must get their nitrogen from the soil in other forms.

The growing of legumes is the most economical method of increasing the amount of nitrogen in the soil.

Most soils contain enough potash to produce maximum crops for hundreds of years. However, most of this potash is locked up in insoluble soil minerals, only a small amount being available at any one time for the growth of plants. The rate at which the potash becomes available in a soil may be increased by supplying a large amount of decaying organic matter. The larger part of the potash used by plants is found in the stalks. Hence, if the manure produced by feeding the straw, stover, and hay is returned to the soil, there is but slight loss of potash.

Phosphoric acid may well be called the keystone of soil fertility in this state. The use of phosphoric acid has produced a large increase at our Agricultural Experiment Station. Experiments also indicate that it is doubtful whether nitrogen or potash can be applied with profit on most soils unless used in connection with phosphoric acid.

Complete fertilizers are mixtures containing nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash mixtures. Large numbers of such mixtures are on the market. The principal danger in buying complete fertilizers lies in the possibility of the nitrogen being present in forms of low availability such as garbage tankage or leather meal. In West Virginia, fertilizer tags must state the ingredients supplying the nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash in a fertilizer. The phosphoric acid and potash in a complete fertilizer is as valuable as any, but it may not be safe to pay much over the value of these two for such a fertilizer. Thus, a 1-8-2 fertilizer, meaning one containing 1% of nitrogen, 8% of available phosphoric acid and 2% of potash, may be worth but little more than an 8-2 alone. A high grade complete fertilizer, such as a 3-8-6 or a 4-10 i, can often be used at a profit on thin land or on crops of high market value per acre.

Use Winter Layers For Breeding

Mark the laying men. Any hen can lay in the spring but the one which lays through winter when eggs are high is the one which deserves recognition by promotion to the breeding flock.

Everything is to be gained and nothing lost by selecting breeding hens during winter. It is easy to select the laying hen. Her comb is bright and red and her pin bones will be spread apart. Hens meeting these qualifications should be set apart with a good, vigorous male bird. It is folly to breed from the entire flock. By selecting a few of the best birds, progress will be made. Where no selection is practiced, the poor producers will be used for breeding, for even loafers will lay in the spring. It is also a mistake to breed from the immature and undersized stock. Over-fat, coarse-boned hens or those which drop behind should never be put in the breeding pen. The best place for them is on the table. Pick out the good birds and note the improvement. Use fewer males so that you can afford better stock.

CURING MEAT.

Dry Salting and Sugar Cure.

At the "short course" held under the auspices of the Washington State college at North Yakima recently, Professor Thornber gave suggestions on curing meat on the farm.

Dry salting is best for hot weather for preserving small pieces of meat without smoking. Use 16 pounds of salt, 4 pounds sugar, 6 ounces of saltpeter per 100 pounds of meat. Rub this into the meat every day for a week, afterward once a week. After each rubbing cover the meat with the salt mixture. Two weeks should be enough for bacon, five or six weeks for hams.

As to the sugar cure let the meat cool a day, then rub a mixture of one part brown sugar to four parts salt into it. Let it lie a day. Then pack into a barrel and weight the meat down. Make a brine of 16 pounds of fine dairy salt, four pounds sugar or molasses, and, if you wish, six ounces of saltpeter per 100 pounds of meat.

Put enough water into this to float an egg. Pour the brine into the barrel. In two weeks the smaller pieces will be ready. The larger ones take five or six weeks. Hang the meat in the smoke-house and build a fire under it. Use apple wood, juniper or corncobs for smoking. After a week take out and hang up. Do not let any water touch the meat after it is smoked.

Sweet peas may be planted in pots or boxes and will give early flowers.

LARGE ROAD MILEAGE BUILT UNDER FEDERAL SUPERVISION

Nearly five million square yards of roadway, the equivalent of 561.9 miles of road 15 feet wide, were constructed under the supervision of Federal road specialists during the last fiscal year, according to the report of the Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. This is more than double the mileage so constructed in previous years. The roads constructed under supervision of the office include experimental roads, post roads, county roads, and roads in National Parks and forests.

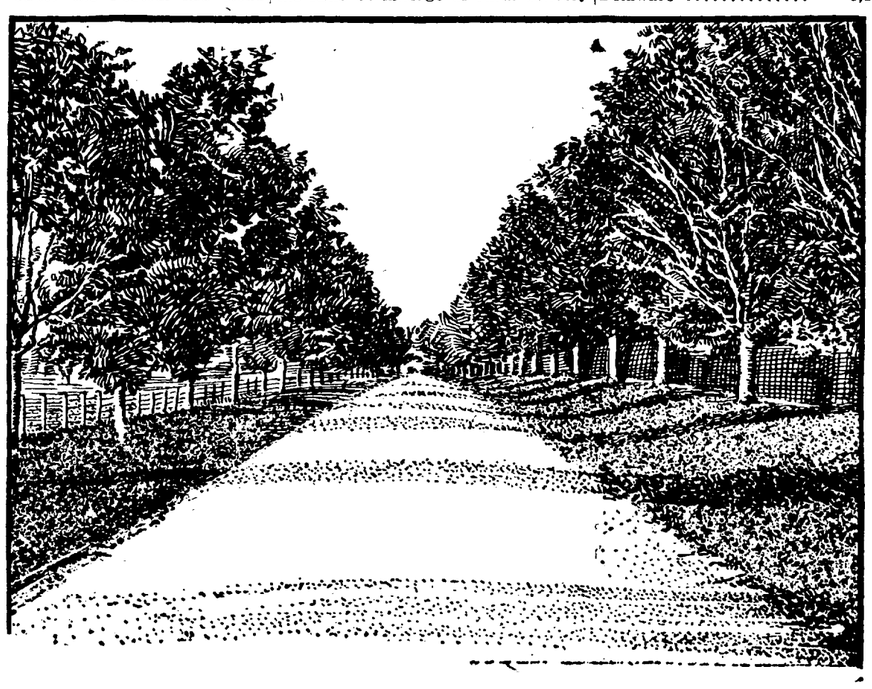
The office made studies and recommendations for improving the complete road systems of 32 counties in a number of States, assigned engineers to inspect specific roads and advise as to their treatment in 113 communities, and specially assigned 7 engineers to assist State departments of roads and other State agencies dealing with roads and road materials.

The demonstration maintenance work undertaken in 1914 on a through route from Washington to Atlanta was continued during the year, the mileage under supervision increasing from 724 to 876. The cumulative effect of continuous maintenance, says the report, has been demonstrated by the fact that from March 15 to June 30, 1916, the road was not closed to traffic at any point.

In the National parks and National forests the office supervised construction on approximately 170 miles of road, of which about 70 miles were completed. One of the roads under construction — the Escalante-Winder road in the Powell National Forest, Utah—will open up communication with a settlement in the valley of the upper Colorado River, which has heretofore been practically cut off from the rest of the world.

The following is the apportionment of the $5,000,000 of Federal road funds available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

This is the first installment of Federal moneys to be apportioned to the States under the Federal Aid Road



Act approved July 11, 1916. Before making the division among the States, the Secretary, in accordance with the Act, deducted 3 per cent or $150,000 needed for administering its provisions. This left $4,850,000 to be apportioned among the States, one-third in the ratio of area, one-third in the ratio of population, and one-third in the ratio of mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes. The apportionment on this basis gives the following amounts for the several States:

Arizona	68,513.52
Arkansas	82,689.10
California	151,063.92
Colorado	83,690.14
Connecticut	31,090.44
Delaware	8,184.37

North Dakota	76,143.06
Ohio	186,905.42
Oklahoma	115,139.00
Oregon	78,687.37
Pennsylvania	230,644.17
Rhode Island	11,665.71
South Carolina	71,807.64
South Dakota	80,946.02
Tennessee	114,153.48
Texas	291,927.81
Utah	56,950.15
Vermont	22,844.47
Virginia	99,660.71
Washington	71,884.28
West Virginia	53,270.46
Wisconsin	128,361.07
Wyoming	61,196.82
Total	$4,850,000.00

The apportionment indicated above is only of one year's funds. For succeeding fiscal years the act appropriates the following amounts:

The apportionment as given above does not take into consideration the $1,000,000 additional appropriated each year for ten years for the development of rural roads in the National Forests.

ALFALFA LAND.

Where land in the East is plowed in the spring for alfalfa, at least four to six weeks should intervene between the time of plowing and seeding, during which time the land should be harrowed every 10 or 12 days to keep down the weeds and to conserve the moisture. Where the soil is inclined to be too loose or when there are any clods, the roller pulverizer is an excellent tool to use.

GRAPES.

KILLING WOOLLY APHIS.

Experiments in the use of poisonous gases against the woolly apple aphis indicate that carbon bisulphid may with good results be applied to the roots by injection or in water poured around the roots. Experiments in the control of the woolly aphis on the roots of nursery apple stock by the use of poisonous gases indicate that while the use of carbon bisulphid is impracticable under nursery conditions, para-dichlorobenzene offers promise against this pest.

Good care, clean food, and regular attendance are necessary to good egg production.

HAVE AN "OLD-FASHIONED" GARDEN.

If you wish to grow flowers in quantities for house decoration, or other purposes, grow them in a border three or four feet wide along a back fence. This is the place for larkspurs, hollyhocks, dahlias, columbines, phlox, Shasta daisies, gladioli, etc. Call this an "old-fashioned" garden, if you will; all the same, everybody likes it.

The artificial incubation of eggs dates back to the early Egyptians who used ovens heated with fermenting manure

HERE'S WHERE YOU CAN MAKE MONEY.

When your implements are brought in from the field inspect them very carefully and note all repairs needed on a tag and tie it on the implement. Carefully clean and oil all bearings and look over wooden parts. If the paint is becoming worn, put on a new coat to prevent the wood from shrinking or swelling. Place the machine under shelter and remove the tag when all repairs have been made in first-class condition.

WEATHER BEAREAU WARNINGS.

The summer seasons of 1913 and 1914 were characterized by almost the complete absence of destructive tropical hurricanes which generally frequent the waters of the Caribbean Sea and Gulf regions. In 1915, however, two severe storms passed over this region, and the observations and reports obtained from its stations enabled the U. S. Weather Bureau to give timely warnings of the occurrence and progress of these destructive storms, resulting, it is believed, in great saving of life and property.

Cold makes animals uncomfortable more quickly than heat.

A Hotbed Helps

A hotbed is a box covered with glass and heated by artificial means. Ordinarily fresh horse manure is the most available and best supply of heat for this purpose to be found on the average farm. After a hotbed is planted, it needs to be carefully ventilated and watered to provide proper conditions for germinating the seed, and it also needs to be carefully watched on account of the danger of damping-off, if it becomes too wet and is not ventilated enough. Also poor ventilation will cause weak, spindling plants. Before removing plants from the hotbed, they must become accustomed to the same conditions they will have to meet in the field. This is called "hardening off." It is done by withholding water and increasing the ventilation for about two weeks, until the covers may be left off the bed entirely—all night as well as in the daytime. When the plants will stand this treatment without danger, they may be safely put in the field.

To Fatten the Calf

Prize to Thirteen-Year-Old-Boy.

In Iowa's baby beef feeding contest, in which more than 1100 boys and girls were enrolled, Clement Rowe, 13 years old, of Glenwood, Mills county, was pronounced winner and state-wide champion. The contest was conducted by the Iowa Beef Producers' association in co-operation with the agricultural extension department at Ames. A $100 trip to Washington or a trophy of the same value, donated by the Union Stock Yards and Transit company of Chicago, was Rowe's reward.

COLD STORAGE EGGS.

Because fewer eggs are produced in the most populous regions of the country than are consumed there, and because the seasons have a marked effect on the number of eggs laid, city housewives must use cold storage eggs during some periods of the year if they are to supply their tables at all with this food. The fact that eggs have been held in cold storage does not necessarily mean that they are of low quality. Carefully handled cold storage eggs often are of better quality than fresh local eggs that have been improperly cared for.

ANTIMONY.

Antimony ore production in the United States in 1915 is estimated at about 5,000 tons, containing 2,000 tons of antimony, valued at about $325,000. The largest previous domestic output was 150 tons of metal and 380 tons of ore carrying 55 per cent of antimony in 1882.

Cultivating Vacant Lots

A great National wave of "Plant Vacant Lots," "Plant the Fence Corners," "Plant the Parks and Lawns" and "Plant Every Inch of Space Available" to break the high food cost of today and the shortage that is bound to come when any country is at war.

In Cleveland they are talking of planting the beautiful lawns of Shaker Heights.

Governor Goodrich has started an organization in the State of Indiana composed of the Mayors of all the cities to further advance this great movement.

Our own Mayor Hosey is heartily in favor or this movement and just a couple of days ago made the suggestion that our many vacant lost in the subdivisions of our city should be cultivated.

In line with our honorable Mayor's suggestion the Wildwood Companies offer to the public our many lots located in all parts of the city for cultivating the much needed vegetables.

The location and further details of our plan may be had by calling at our office on West Berry St., or phoning 2147 or 2167.

FOUR CENTS ADVANCE IN WHEAT QUOTATION

Wholesale Markets Have Unusually Light Receipts—Hay Up.

Wheat advanced 4 cents more on its way to $2.50 or $3.00, whichever the case may be, and flour followed with a rise of 20 cents on the barrel. The outlook for further advances is very bright, in fact much brighter than the majority of the people like to see. In the larger markets the grain rose 7 cents Saturday morning. Hay also added $1 at the close of the week, light receipts seeming to be the cause. Only four loads were received during the day. Throughout the wholesale markets business was very dull, due to the fact that farmers are busy just now with the beginning of cultivation. Business is expected to be slow for several days now. No corn nor oats were offered Saturday.

CHICAGO GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

Chicago, April 14.—Wheat jumped today to new high price levels. Shorts who tried to cover found the market bare of offerings and were forced to raise bids with stunning swiftness. Opening quotations, which ranged from ¼c to 3c higher, with May at $2.23½ to $2.24, and July at $1.89 to $1.89¾, were followed by a general step upward on which May touched $2.25¾.

The close, nevertheless, was firm at 1½c to 4c net advance, with May at $2.24½ to $2.25, and July at $1.91½ to $1.92.

Corn, like wheat, ascended to new top records. After opening unchanged to 1½c up, the market scored decided gains all around. The close was unsettled at gains of 1c to 1⅞c net.

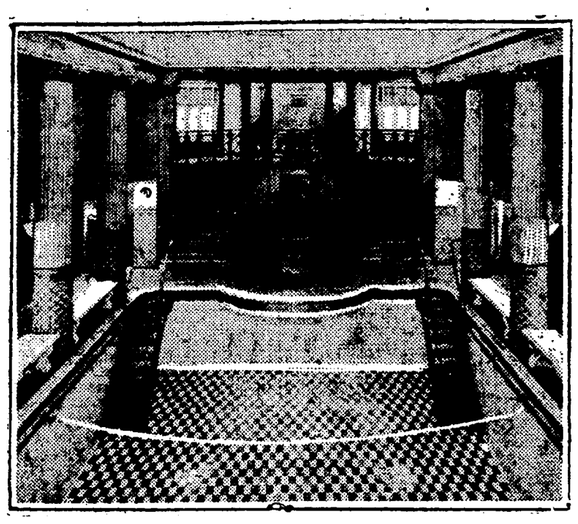
FAMOUS ROMAN BATH ON WORLD'S LARGEST SHIP MAY STABLE MULES.



The famous Roman Bath on board the Vaterland in which the government may stable mules for transport to Europe. The bath is of marble and was built at enormous expense.

(BY F. M. KERBY.)

New York, April 13.—There is a possibility today that the Vaterland, the largest ship in the world, seized from Germany by the United States, will sail with the first detachment of American expeditionary troops for the battle line in France and with a consignment of mules stabled in the famous Roman bath of the ship, which cost thousands of dollars to install.

There is also a possibility that the Amerika, the Kaiser Wilhelm II, the Grosser Kurfurst, the Frederick der Grosse and the rest of the 91 interned German vessels seized by the United States will soon sail for Europe with shells, food and supplies of all kinds for the allies.

Collector of Port Malone expected to find the engines of all smashed beyond repair, but it is now believed most of them can be placed in good shape within a few weeks and expert workmen are being recruited to fix them.

The 91 German vessels seized have a gross tonnage of 594,696, and Austrian vessels seized have tonnage of 25,027, a total of 619,723. None of the Austrian ships have been tampered with.

If placed in trans-Atlantic service, these vessels will wipe out two-thirds of all damage done by German U-boats to allied and neutral shipping since they began the "mad dog" submarine campaign, February 1.

During February, according to figures from the British admiralty and other sources, 456,326 tons of shipping were sunk.

Up to March 27, approximately 426,000 tons were sunk during the month of March, a total of 876,817 tons.

If Uncle Sam decides to put the Teutonic vessels into commission, 619,723 tons of this can be almost instantly replaced.

Within six months, at the latest, even those vessels badly damaged can be replaced, and the whole can be placed in service.

The question whether these vessels shall be used by the United States depends upon the state department's interpretation of the treaty of 1828, which Secretary Lansing has already said Germany has broken.

It is likely the vessels will be turned over to the United States shipping board, and such of them as the navy desires assigned to service.

The remainder can be placed in merchant service to the allied countries, wiping out at one swoop all the submarine damage caused by the Germans in a month and a half.

If the German U-boats sink these vessels while they are being used by the United States government the liability of the government for payment to the owners would of course cease. The Germans would simply be destroying their own property.

When the Stars and Stripes go up at the taff rail, and these boats receive their war coats of battleship gray paint, it is likely their German names will be painted out, and some good old United States names attached.

THE DAY ON WALL STREET.

New York, April 14.—Speculative issues, notably sugars, oils, shippings and other semi-war descriptions, were the strong features of today's market, with more moderate strength in munitions and equipments. Cuban-American Sugar was conspicuous for its eleven-point gain, this being counterbalanced by a break of nine and one-half in People's Gas on the cut in the dividend. Other gas shares fell in sympathy. Consolidated Gas losing over three points. U. S. Steel made an extreme advance of one and one-quarter points, with one to two for General Electric, U. S. Rubber, Goodrich and Wilson Packing. Rails and Coppers were neglected. The closing was strong. Sales were estimated at 250,000 shares. Bonds were irregular.

NOT A VOTE IS CAST AGAINST BOND MEASURE

General Debate Closed With Measure Amended to Prevent Hampering of the Government.

PARTISAN SPIRIT IS ENTIRELY ABSENT

Washington, April 14.—The war revenue bill authorizing seven billion dollars for the national defense was passed late this afternoon by the house by an overwhelming vote.

The vote of the house was unanimous, Speaker Clark directing that his vote be recorded as aye. Representative London, New York, socialist, was the only member answering present.

An amendment was added to omit specifically distribution of the proposed three billion foreign loan which the bill would authorize to countries actually at war with Germany and only during hostilities. It was approved by Secretary McAdoo and agreed to by the framers of the bill after several members had insisted that without the limitations the secretary might make loans to European neutrals after the war ends.

The feature of the debate was the absence of partisan spirit.

Mann Stands by Wilson.

An amendment by Representative Shackleford to levy an additional income tax with a view to preventing any net income of over $50,000 annually to any person was ruled out of order on objection Democratic Leader Kitchin.

A proposal by Representative Townsend, of Iowa, to eliminate the proposed $3,000,000,000 loan to the allies was eliminated also.

Speeches by Republican Leader Mann and Representatives Rainey, of Illinois; Fitzgerald, of New York, and Gardner, of Massachusetts, urging full adoption of the broad feature of the administration's plan were roundly applauded. Towner explained he did not think power should be vested in the secretary of the treasury and the president alone to manage the loan without more assistance from congress. He declared he was not opposed to the proposed loan itself. Supporters of the bill, however, saw in the result of the vote on Towner's proposal a test of their strength and they attacked it with fervid and patriotic argument.

Stirs Up Enthusiasm.

Representative Fitzgerald aroused great enthusiasm by declaring he favored making the loan at once, not because of a deesire to help another nation but to help maintain the right of the United States. Money being the only aid that this country can now give the allies, Representative Fitzgerald declared it should not be denied them.

"This proposed appropriation," said he, "is for $3,000,000,000. I doubt not that before a year that amount will be doubled. Let us hope that we can end the war by exteending our credit. Our highest duty is to give aid to those who arer fighting our enemies. I hope and

La Paz, Bolivia, April 14.—The note of the Bolivian government t othe German minister announcing the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany, denounces the attacks of German submarines on neutral vessels as violations of international law and The Hague conventions. The note recalls that the Bolivian minister to Berlin was on board the Holland-Lloyd steamer Tubantia, when that vessel was sunk in neutral waters a year ago. The note declares that German subjects and property will enjoy all liberties guaranteed by law provided that they do not commit any act of delinquency, either collectively or as individuals.

TURKS AGAIN TAKE SEVERE DEFEAT AT HANDS OF BRITISH

London, April 14.—(4:16 p. m.)—The Turks have sustained another defeat at the hands of the British in Mesopotamia. The war office announces that the Turks are in retreat after a battle in which they suffered heavy losses.

The Turks were driven from their positions near Ghaliyeh, ten miles northeast of Deltawah (Deltawah is 25 miles north of Bagdad.) They then withdrew toward Seraijik and thence toward Dely Abbas. The British are pursuing the Turks.

On Wednesday the Turks lost 200 killed and 700 wounded.

This announcement indicates that the British have wrecked the plan of the Turks to halt the invading armies, which have been sweping forward without serious interruption for several weeks. An official British statement on Tuesday said the Turks were preparing a converging movement against the British between the Adheim and Diala rivers. It is in this region that the fighting now reported occurred.

ART SMITH'S MOTHER WILL WATCH HIM FLY IN LAND OF THE MIKADO.

The above photograph was taken just a short time before Art Smith, Fort Wayne bird boy, and his mother, of this city, sailed from San Francisco for Japan. Mrs. Smith left three weeks ago to join her son in San Francisco. "Art" and his mother expect to spend a month in the Mikado's kingdom, where the Fort Wayne bird boy will complete his flying contracts at various Japanese cities.

Smith has refused to make any new engagements on account of Uncle Sam's connection with the war. At the end of his tour he will return to San Francisco and take up the work of aviation instructor for the government.

He still limps as a result of his broken leg and is at present ineligible for service in the United States aerial corps, of which he is a member.

GERMAN ARMY IN PERIL ON WEST FRONT

London, April 14.—"The British offensive has developed into a great push in the most literal sense of the word," telegraphs Reuter's correspondent at the British army headquarters in France.

"The success of the operations which began on Monday has been greater than perhaps were realized and the Germans are being pushed back from Loos to the southward.

"It takes an army a long time to get away, however skilfully the retirement may have been planned, and with a vigorous offensive clinging to its skirts in its effort to avoid defeat it may be overwhelmed.

"German garrisons scattered out of some villages during the night but this slipping away cannot be carried very far and when they are forced back on the line to which they may have hastily withdrawn and without their guns and stores which they were unable to get away, a decisive thing may happen."

BERLIN LEADER OF SOCIALISTS GET TEN DAYS

Amsterdam, April 14.—It is reported from Berlin that Rosa Luxemburg, formerly principal editor of the Vorwaerts and leader of the radical German socialists, who has been in prison for participation in an anti-war demonstration, has been sentenced to an additional ten days' imprisonment for abusing a policeman. Mlle. Luxemburg had been permitted to receive a friend, but the policeman cut the visit short. The prisoner is said to have denounced the officer in abusive terms and to have flung an inkwell at him. The sentence was confirmed by the Berlin court of appeals.

Rosa Luxemburg has had a stormy career for several years. She has been imprisoned several times, once in Russia. At the outbreak of the war she was under sentence of one year for making inflammatory speeches and was reported to have been shot.

FOOD CAMPAIGN IS PUSHED HARD IN WASHINGTON

Washington, April 14.—Activities of the government in furtherance of its campaign to stimulate food production in the United States during the war continued unbated today. Among these activities were. Secretary Houston conferred with leaders regarding proposed legislation authorizing the government to regulate and fix food prices, if necessary, and to license large distributing agencies.

President Wilson had under consideration a suggestion approved by Secretary Houston that he issue a proclamation calling the public's attention to the need for increased production and economy in the use of foodstuffs. In addition the department of agriculture sent out broadcast over the country copies of an appeal by Premier Lloyd-George, of England to Englishmen to plant more crops in an effort to combat the submarine peril. An accompanying statement pointed out that the appeal was peculiarly appliable to Americans and should be heeded.

MANY BAKERIES IN COLOGNE ARE SHUT ON ORDERS

Copenhagen, April 14.—A Cologne dispatch to the Berlin Tageblatt says that sixty-eight bakeries have been closed by the police for violation of food regulations. At a meeting of bakers the guild master said that a third of all the bakeries in Cologne were facing court proceedings. He declared the method of many bakers in disposing of the flour allotted to them was shameful.

COMMISSION TO THE RUSS

America Wishes to Know in What Way She Can Best Aid New Republic.

President May Designate Envoys to Pay Visit to Petrograd.

Washington, D. C., April 14.—Official confirmation that the United States is considering a commission to Russia to see in what ways this country can be of aid to the new government was given today at the state department. It was stated that while no final decision had been reached, the commission would cover all phases of Russo-American co-operation in the war. Mobilization of Russia's immense but latent resources is one of the main considerations in mind.

At the same time actual knowledge of Russia's greatest needs would make possible the most direct kind of aid from the United States. Owing to the difficulties of getting supplies into Russia through the partially icebound port of Archangel on the White sea or Vladivostok, a month's voyage across the Pacific, it will not be possi-

HAVE SHOOTER PENNED UP IN A LONG TUNNEL

Elko, Nev., April 14.—National guardsmen today were closely watching both entrances to a Western Pacific railroad tunnel to prevent the escape of the person who yesterday shot and wounded Corporal John Murphy. Murphy was shot three times in the legs while making a search for a man who was observed to slip into the entrance of the tunnel while the guard was being changed. The guardsman was accompanied by three privates. He had traveled about 200 yards when the lantern was shot from his hand. Three more shots followed, each taking effect. The tunnel, which is 2,500 feet long, is filled with crevices and it is possible the fugitive is hidden away there.

WAR ACTIVITIES ARE LIVELY IN SOUTH AMERICA

Rio Janeiro, April 14.—Great activities in military circles is reported by the newspapers. The army staff is said to be studying every phase of national defense including munition production and the protection of the ports. Rumors are current that breach of relations with Austria will probably occur soon. Telegrams from all points in Brazil report patriotic demonstrations.

The Jornal de Commerce advocates the mobilization of all rifle societies in southern Brazil.

AMERICAN CREW ABANDONS SHIP AS SHELLS COME

Washington, April 14.—The American schooner Edward Hunt of New York was abandoned by her crew under shell fire from a submarine near Cape Gata, Spain, in the Mediterranean, April 7, according to a dispatch to the state department from Consul Gassett, at Malaga.

Consul Gassett's message said: "Amreican schooner Edwin R. Hunt, of New York, Nicholas Miller, master, with crew of eight, bound from Cretto to New York in ballast, shelled by submarine at 4 a. m., April 7, forty miles off Cape Gata. Ship abandoned by crew under fire, fate unknown. Crew all saved, brought to Almeria by Danish ship Konso."

BULL DOG GRIP ON THE WHOLE TEUTONIC LINE

HAIG'S BATTLE PLANS ARE WINNING

London, April 14.—The British have taken a bull dog grip on the whole German line from Loos to north of St. Quentin and refuse to be shaken off. Under what the newspapers call the "Haig plan," first one section of the Hindenburg line and then another has been subjected to violent bombardment followed by infantry attacks which have badly shaken, if they have not seriously broken, the front of what the Germans have depended on for defense of the industrial districts of France which have been in their hands for more than two years. The Lens coal mining area around the town is being closely invested and the German hold on it is becoming most precarious. Several more villages and positions southwest of the town fell into British hands during the night, together with four 9-inch howitzers and the line here has been lined up with the positions taken from the Germans in the battle of Loos. The German stay in St. Quentin is likewise additionally threatened through the capture by the British of the village of Fayet, a bare mile northwest of the town, from which point the British guns command the German lines of communication northward. Again the British have advanced further toward

British assaults have broken four miles more of the German rfont in an important sector of the Arras battlefield.

The Hindenburg line has been riddled on its northern end. Lens is fast being hemmed in and Gen. Haig's forces are sweeping back the Germans from the Loos sector far to the southeast of Arras.

Correspondents report every indication of a continuation of the German retirement under the smashing offensive o fthe British. The Teutons are being hard pressed as they retreat and explosions and fires are observed in their rear.

Great importance is attached to the success of the British in the fighting north of Vimy. They have carried there several important positions, including points between Givench-en-Gopelle and Angers, enabling Gen. Haig to link up the ground won in the engagements early this week in the Arras region with the positions gained long ago in the costly battle of Loos. This movement is resulting in the development of Lens with its valuable coal fields.

The fall of St. Quentin also seems imminent. London reports the capture by British forces of the village of Fayet, one mile northwest of St. Quentin. The French are close to this important fortified position on the south, and Paris today announces the French guns hammering St. Quentin's defenses. Between St. Quentin and in the main battlefield of Arras, British troops continue to press forward towards Cambrai, pushing ahead north of the Bapume-Cambrai road towards Queant.

More big guns are being taken from the Germans as they retire. Last night Gen. Haig reported a total of 100 captured, with more than 13,000 prisoners in all, while today the London official report mentions four more eight-inch howitzers taken.

NOT A VOTE IS CAST AGAINST BOND MEASURE

General Debate Closed With Measure Amended to Prevent Hampering of the Government.

PARTISAN SPIRIT IS ENTIRELY ABSENT

Washington, April 14.—The war revenue bill authorizing seven billion dollars for the national defense was passed late this afternoon by the house by an overwhelming vote.

The vote of the house was unanimous, Speaker Clark directing that his vote be recorded as aye. Representative London, New York, socialist, was the only member answering present.

An amendment was added to omit specifically distribution of the proposed three billion foreign loan which the bill would authorize to countries actually at war with Germany and only during hostilities. It was approved by Secretary McAdoo and agreed to by the framers of the bill after several members had insisted that without the limitations the secretary might make loans to European neutrals after the war ends.

The feature of the debate was the absence of partisan spirit.

Mann Stands by Wilson.

An amendment by Representative Shackleford to levy an additional income tax with a view to preventing any net income of over $50,000 annually to any person was ruled out of order on objection Democratic Leader Kitchin.

A proposal by Representative Towner, of Iowa, to eliminate the proposed $3,000,000,000 loan to the allies was eliminated also.

Speeches by Republican Leader Mann and Representatives Rainey, of Illinois; Fitzgerald, of New York, and Gardner, of Massachusetts, urging full adoption of the broad feature of the administration's plan were roundly applauded. Towner explained, he did not think power should be vested in the secretary of the treasury and the president alone to manage the loan without more assistance from congress. He declared he was not opposed to the proposed loan itself. Supporters of the bill, however, saw in the result of the vote on Towner's proposal a test of their strength and they attacked it with fervid and patriotic argument.

Stirs Up Enthusiasm.

Representative Fitzgerald aroused great enthusiasm by declaring he favored making the loan at once, not because of a deesire to help another nation but to help maintain the right of the United States. Money being the only aid that this country can now give the allies, Representative Fitzgerald declared it should not be denied them.

"This proposed appropriation," said he, "is for $3,000,000,000. I doubt not that before a year that amount will be doubled. Let us hope that we can end the war by extending our credit. Our highest duty is to give aid to those who arer fighting our enemies. I hope and

La Paz, Bolivia, April 14.—The note of the Bolivian government t othe German minister announcing the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany, denounces the attacks of German submarines on neutral vessels as violations of international law and The Hague conventions. The note recalls that the Bolivian minister to Berlin was on board the Holland-Lloyd steamer Tubantia, when that vessel was sunk in neutral waters a year ago. The note declares that German subjects and property will enjoy all liberties guaranteed by law provided that they do not commit any act of delinquency, either collectively or as individuals.

TURKS AGAIN TAKE SEVERE DEFEAT AT HANDS OF BRITISH

London, April 14.—(4:16 p. m.)—The Turks have sustained another defeat at the hands of the British in Mesopotamia. The war office announces that the Turks are in retreat after a battle in which they suffered heavy losses.

The Turks were driven from their positions near Ghaliyeh, ten miles northeast of Deltawah (Deltawah is 25 miles north of Bagdad.) They then withdrew toward Seraijik and thence toward Dely Abbas. The British are pursuing the Turks.

On Wednesday the Turks lost 200 killed and 700 wounded.

This announcement indicates that the British have wrecked the plan of the Turks to halt the invading armies, which have been sweping forward without serious interruption for several weeks. An official British statement on Tuesday said the Turks were preparing a converging movement against the British between the Adheim and Diala rivers. It is in this region that the fighting now reported occurred.

ART SMITH'S MOTHER WILL WATCH HIM FLY IN LAND OF THE MIKADO.

The above photograph was taken just a short time before Art Smith, Fort Wayne bird boy, and his mother, of this city, sailed from San Francisco for Japan. Mrs. Smith left three weeks ago to join her son in San Francisco. "Art" and his mother expect to spend a month in the Mikado's kingdom, where the Fort Wayne bird boy will complete his flying contracts at various Japanese cities.

Smith has refused to make any new engagements on account of Uncle Sam's connection with the war. At the end of his tour he will return to San Francisco and take up the work of aviation instructor for the government.

He still limps as a result of his broken leg and is at present ineligible for service in the United States aerial corps, of which he is a member.

GERMAN ARMY IN PERIL ON WEST FRONT

London, April 14.—"The British offensive has developed into a great push in the most literal sense of the word," telegraphs Reuter's correspondent at the British army headquarters in France.

"The success of the operations which began on Monday has been greater than perhaps were realized and the Germans are being pushed back from Loos to the southward.

"It takes an army a long time to get away, however skilfully the retirement may have been planned, and with a vigorous offensive clinging to its skirts in its effort to avoid defeat it may be overwhelmed.

"German garrisons scattered out of some villages during the night but this slipping away cannot be carried very far and when they are forced back on the line to which they may have hastily withdrawn and without their guns and stores which they were unable to get away, a decisive thing may happen."

BERLIN LEADER OF SOCIALISTS GET TEN DAYS

Amsterdam, April 14.—It is reported from Berlin that Rosa Luxemburg, formerly principal editor of the Vorwaerts and leader of the radical German socialists, who has been in prison for participation in an anti-war demonstration, has been sentenced to an additional ten days' imprisonment for abusing a policeman. Mlle. Luxemburg had been permitted to receive a friend, but the policeman cut the visit short. The prisoner is said to have denounced the officer in abusive terms and to have flung an inkwell at him. The sentence was confirmed by the Berlin court of appeals.

Rosa Luxemburg has had a stormy career for several years. She has been imprisoned several times, once in Russia. At the outbreak of the war she was under sentence of one year for making inflammatory speeches and was reported to have been shot.

FOOD CAMPAIGN IS PUSHED HARD IN WASHINGTON

Washington, April 14.—Activities of the government in furtherance of its campaign to stimulate food production in the United States during the war continued unbated today. Among these activities were. Secretary Houston conferred with leaders regarding proposed legislation authorizing the government to regulate and fix food prices, if necessary, and to license large distributing agencies.

President Wilson had under consideration a suggestion approved by Secretary Houston that he issue a proclamation calling the public's attention to the need for increased production and economy in the use of foodstuffs. In addition the department of agriculture sent out broadcast over the country copies of an appeal by Premier Lloyd-George, of England to Englishmen to plant more crops in an effort to combat the submarine peril. An accompanying statement pointed out that the appeal was peculiarly appliable to Americans and should be heeded.

MANY BAKERIES IN COLOGNE ARE SHUT ON ORDERS

Copenhagen, April 14.—A Cologne dispatch to the Berlin Tageblatt says that sixty-eight bakeries have been closed by the police for violation of food regulations. At a meeting of bakers the guild master said that a third of all the bakeries in Cologne were facing court proceedings. He declared the method of many bakers in disposing of the flour allotted to them was shameful.

COMMISSION TO THE RUSS

America Wishes to Know in What Way She Can Best Aid New Republic.

President May Designate Envoys to Pay Visit to Petrograd.

Washington, D. C., April 14.—Official confirmation that the United States is considering a commission to Russia to see in what ways this country can be of aid to the new government was given today at the state department. It was stated that while no final decision had been reached, the commission would cover all phases of Russo-American co-operation in the war. Mobilization of Russia's immense but latent resources is one of the main considerations in mind.

At the same time actual knowledge of Russia's greatest needs would make possible the most direct kind of aid from the United States. Owing to the difficulties of getting supplies into Russia through the partially icebound port of Archangel on the White sea or Vladivostok, a month's voyage across the Pacific, it will not be possi-

HAVE SHOOTER PENNED UP IN A LONG TUNNEL

Elko, Nev., April 14.—National guardsmen today were closely watching both entrances to a Western Pacific railroad tunnel to prevent the escape of the person who yesterday shot and wounded Corporal John Murphy. Murphy was shot three times in the legs while making a search for a man who was observed to slip into the entrance of the tunnel while the guard was being changed. The guardsman was accompanied by three privates. He had traveled about 200 yards when the lantern was shot from his hand. Three more shots followed, each taking effect. The tunnel, which is 2,500 feet long, is filled with crevices and it is possible the fugitive is hidden away there.

WAR ACTIVITIES ARE LIVELY IN SOUTH AMERICA

Rio Janeiro, April 14.—Great activities in military circles is reported by the newspapers. The army staff is said to be studying every phase of national defense including munition production and the protection of the ports. Rumors are current that breach of relations with Austria will probably occur soon. Telegrams from all points in Brazil report patriotic demonstrations.

The Jornal de Commerce advocates the mobilization of all rifle societies in southern Brazil.

AMERICAN CREW ABANDONS SHIP AS SHELLS COME

Washington, April 14.—The American schooner Edward Hunt of New York was abandoned by her crew under shell fire from a submarine near Cape Gata, Spain, in the Mediterranean, April 7, according to a dispatch to the state department from Consul Gassett, at Malaga.

Consul Gassett's message said: "Amreican schooner Edwin R. Hunt, of New York, Nicholas Miller, master, with crew of eight, bound from Crette to New York in ballast, shelled by submarine at 4 a. m., April 7, forty miles off Cape Gata. Ship abandoned by crew under fire, fate unknown. Crew all saved, brought to Almeria by Danish ship Konso."

BULL DOG GRIP ON THE WHOLE TEUTONIC LINE

HAIG'S BATTLE PLANS ARE WINNING

London, April 14.—The British have taken a bull dog grip on the whole German line from Loos to north of St. Quentin and refuse to be shaken off. Under what the newspapers call the "Haig plan," first one section of the Hindenburg line and then another has been subjected to violent bombardment followed by infantry attacks which have badly shaken, if they have not seriously broken, the front of what the Germans have depended on for defense of the industrial districts of France which have been in their hands for more than two years. The Lens coal mining area around the town is being closely invested and the German hold on it is becoming most precarious. Several more villages and positions southwest of the town fell into British hands during the night, together with four 9-inch howitzers and the line here has been lined up with the positions taken from the Germans in the battle of Loos. The German stay in St. Quentin is likewise additionally threatened though the capture by the British of the village of Fayet, a bare mile northwest of the town, from which point the British guns command the German lines of communication northward. Again the British have advanced further toward

British assaults have broken four miles more of the German rfont in an important sector of the Arras battlefield.

The Hindenburg line has been riddled on its northern end. Lens is fast being hemmed in and Gen. Haig's forces are sweeping back the Germans from the Loos sector far to the southeast of Arras.

Correspondents report every indication of a continuation of the German retirement under the smashing offensive o fthe British. The Teutons are being hard pressed as they retreat and explosions and fires are observed in their rear.

Great importance is attached to the success of the British in the fighting north of Vimy. They have carried there several important positions, including points between Givench-en-Gopelle and Angers, enabling Gen. Haig to link up the ground won in the engagements early this week in the Arras region with the positions gained long ago in the costly battle of Loos. This movement is resulting in the development of Lens with its valuable coal fields.

The fall of St. Quentin also seems imminent. London reports the capture by British forces of the village of Fayet, one mile northwest of St. Quentin. The French are close to this important fortified position on the south, and Paris today announces the French guns hammering St. Quentin's defenses. Between St. Quentin and in the main battlefield of Arras, British troops continue to press forward towards Cambrai, pushing ahead north of the Bapume-Cambrai road towards Queant.

COST OF LIVING IN GERMANY IS ABOVE INCOMES

Copenhagen, April 14.—The results of the statistical investigation into the war cost of living in Germany, which was conducted in April, 1916, and which are now published, show that the cost of the bare necessities of life for families in the lowest wage class, materially exceeds their income. This class includes families earning from 100 to 200 marks monthly and their living expenses are put at 222 marks, 5 pfennigs. The deficit, the report remarks, has been covered by either drawing on savings or running in debt. All prices have steadily gone up in the ensuing year, increasing the impossibility of the poorly paid classes, who include persons ranked as in the educated middle classes in America, to make ends meet without public relief.

Amsterdam, April 14.—German correspondents on the Russian and Swedish frontiers report that the Russian provisional government intends to change the name of the capital back to St. Petersburg. The government is said to have decided upon this "because Petrograd recalls to every Russian the saddest times in Russian history."

The Germans possibly feel the change more than any one else, for above all things they love their underground comfort. The Germans were the first to transfer fighting to ditches and they are reluctantly giving up that style of warfare.

Digging in, Second Nature.

The deep concreted dugouts and tunnels along the old front were the only protection the Germans had against the ever-increasing British gun fire and every time they get an opportunity to pause no wthey immediately begin to dig in. They take to cover as if by second nature. The British have always contended that the German dugouts softened the men, who congregated in them always, and could only be kept with difficulty in the open trenches. So it was easier to break the British of the trench habit than has been the case with the Germans.

Open field tactics have been a part of the training of the new British army ever since its organization began in 1914. There has been some criticism of that system from time to time on the ground that the war would always be fought from trench to trench, but for the last few months the British army in France has been drilled in open tactics almost daily.

Value is Proved.

The results of these training methods have been apparent in the last few days and will undoubtedly prove still more valuable in the wider operations which are unquestionably coming. The losses in the recently inaugurated operations, which continue to widen with time, have been so much smaller than would be naturally expected in attacks upon such strong positions as those from which the Germans have been driven that the army authorities are feeling jubilant. Another gratifying feature of the fighting has been the speed with which the British troops have everywhere attained their objectives. Driving the Germans from positions which they had held for two years gives the army a higher fighting spirit than it ever had before.

Name of Line is Changed.

The turning of the top of the Hindenburg line, to which attention is now officially called in the communiques, has been an achievement of which the full importance has naturally not yet been developed. The Germans by the way, no longer call this line after Hindenburg but know it as the Siegfried line. The switch to that line from Queant north—which, prisoners say, is not yet finished and was not expected to be used except as a last resort—is known as the Wotan line. In the extreme south the Hindenburg line is known as the Albrecht line. The complete smashing of the Vimy ridge seems to have somewhat upset the German plan but they are evidently determined to put up the strongest possible defensive fight, before falling back again to the uncompleted positions, where dugouts are building and the protection is doubtful.

Thrilling Personal Incidents.

These days are filled with thrilling incidents of individual exploits which are difficult to sort from the mass coming in from so wide a battle front. One of the most remarkable is that of a young airman, who although shot in the eye and the leg in an air duel yesterday succeeded in bringing down the opposing machine in his own lines, dragged himself from the airplane, made a verbal report on his mission and died a few moments later.

The gaps in the German defense were made in two places. Positions on a front of three miles between the Double Crassier and Givenchy and another mile on the north flank of the Hindenburg trench system were captured. Advanced posts were pushed well toward Queant and Pronvills, important points in the German defenses.

The Germans are fighting as they retire from Loos southward and are being hard pressed.

Fires and explosions in the territory to the rear of the German lines continue. The weather today was favorable for campaigning.

ble for this country to send any great mass of supplies to Russia. What is sent, therefore, must be most carefully selected. The administration wishes to do everything in its power to aid the democratizing of Russia in the common struggle against German autocracy. To that end a large Russian credit would be granted as soon as congress passes the war loan bill. It is possible that this credit would be established even before any commission goes to Russia.

Russia's Needs Pressing.

Pressing need for extending aid to Russia, particularly by sending efficiency engineers to build up railroads and other industries has been called to President Wilson's attention in a letter from Michael M. Podolsky, a distinguished Russian engineer formerly connected with the Russian government and now living in Philadelphia.

"As every one knows," Mr. Podolsky wrote, "this war is a war in which the country most highly developed in engineering and technical matters is at an advantage. It is not such a war as would have been waged one hundred years ago. Germany is astonishingly well organized to conduct such a war. Her railroad building is remarkable and she can easily concentrate large masses of troops at any given point in a very short time. But Russia, because of her lamentable lack of communication, her railroads and her insignificant mileage is virtually helpless, even though she has millions of men to call upon."

the Cambrai-St. Quentin road while southeast of Arras they are approaching Queant, which is the northern extremity of the new German line defending Cambrai.

Gen. Horne, who is considered the greatest artillery expert in the British army and who assisted Gen. Nivelle in the successful attack by the French north of Verdun in December, last commands the British forces around Lens where, owing to the natural defenses composed of waste dumps around the mines, the artillery must largely be depended upon. Gen. Horne has on his right the army under Maj. Gen. E. H. Allenby, who has also gained new laurels in this war.

These generals and their colleagues under Filed Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, have accomplished since Monday a work which many military writers expected would occupy a great part of the summer but thus far there has been no flag waving or celebration in Great Britain. The impression prevails that greater events will soon follow and that with the fall of Lens the relief of Lille will not be long delayed.

GERMAN FRONT BROKEN.

British Headquarters in France, Via London, April 14.—(From a Staff Correspondent of the Associated Press.)—The British last night broke the German front for a distance of four miles. The Germans are in retreat.

CLOSING IN ON ST. QUENTIN.

London, April 14.—The village of Fayet, one mile northwest of St. Quentin, has been captured by the British after a sharp fight, according to an official statement issued by the war office.

The imporant positions of Ascension farm and Grand Priel farm east of Leverguier, were also captured.

In the direction of Vimy the British seized the Vimy station, La Chaudiere and enemy positions between Givenchy-en-Gopelle and Angres. Progress was also made north of the Bapaume-Cambral road.

Among the guns captured by the British were four howitzers of eight inches.

ARTILLERY ENGAMEMENT.

Paris, April 14.—Artillery fighting continues with marked intensity in the Champagne, the war office announces. French patrols were active and brought back prisoners. South of St. Quentin there were heavy artillery actions.

BERLIN OFFICIAL REPORT.

Berlin, April 14.—(Via London.)—Northeast of Arras and on the river Scarpe there was a pause in the fighting activity yesterday, says the official statement issued by the headquarters staff.

On both banks of the river Somme, the German statement adds, strong enemy forces again advanced against our St. Quentin position. The attacks failed under heavy losses, the British leaving three officers and more than 200 men in our hands.

Further south at Croiselles and Bullecourt, says the announcement, the British after violent artillery fire several times vainly attacked. In a counter thrust "we inflicted considerable losses on the enemy."

pray that aid thus given will be effectual enough to end the war before we send our boys into the trenches."

No Army; Must Use Money.

Several amendments, including two by Representative Lenroot, to exclude neutrals from the loan and make its tenure the duration of the war, were accepted by the ways and means committee. Representative Madden, of Illinois, said he did not care whether $3,000,000,000 loaned the allies was paid back or not; that the United States is not prepared to send men now and the loan was the only way in which the United States could act promptly and effectively at this time. "For God's sake, let's get into action," he cried, "either through the armies now in the field or in our own army, and everybody knows we can't get an adequate army for a year. The time for talk is past and the time for action is here."

There was much opposition to a proposal by Representative Moore, of Pennsylvania, to limit the maturity of the issue. All the leaders spoke for leaving that to the discretion of the president or the treasury department.

Representative Montague, of Virginia, democrat, said he hoped that in the present eexigencies the debt of gratitude America owes to France in the days of America's weakness should not be forgotten in tne days of America's strength.

May Result in Forming of Military Unit of the Members.

At the next meeting of the Friar club to be held next Wednesday evening, Captain George Byroade will address the members on the subject of "Military Preparedness." It is thought that the talk will result in the formation of a military unit to be composed of the club members. If this is done, drill will be held regularly under Capt. Byroade.

Friardom, the monthly paper issued by the club, puts attendance at this meeting in the class of duty, not only to the club, but to the country and a strong note of patriotism runs throughout the announcement which urges members to "be there." It also emphasizes the fact that untrained "rookies" are useless when it comes to the real work and strongly favors preparedness.

The April issue of Friardom is full of announcements and post mortems. Among the latter is a story of the Friar Frolic, staged at the Palace last Thursday evening. The last social affair of the club will be a big dance at the Elks' next Friday night. The committee in charge consists of Roth Keller, chairman; Howard Gumpper, George Bailling, Dr. E. C. Singer and Carl Pierson.

WEATHER MAN OFFERS NO CONSOLING WORDS

Weather for Sunday Will Be Similar to That of a Week Ago.

Words of consolation are lacking in the weather man's prediction for Sunday's weather. No soothing words are uttered for those people who deferred Easter garding in their new gowns and suits until a week after the official day. Those who did not don their new clothes last Sunday because the weather was unsatisfactory will have no better chance this Sabbath day.

The weather man states that it is very likely the temperature will not be any higher than it was a week ago. The prediction is that it will be a fair day, a trifle improvement over last Sunday.

PEACE NEAR IS PROPHECY

BELIEVE END OF WAR FORECASTED

Count von Reventlow is Against Any Peace Without Gain.

Copenhagen, April 14.—Peace within two months and a half is predicted by the Copenhagen correspondent of the Danish Socialist Press, who confirms the reports of unofficial negotiations between Russia and German socialists as against the diplomatic denials in the socialist newspapers here and in Berlin.

The first negotiations says the correspondent, who is a socialist member of the Danish parliament, were broken off, enabling the papers to deny that they were in progress, but they were immediately resumed and are being prosecuted vigorously. The correspondent then entered into a discussion of peace terms in which he appears to take German socialist expectations and hopes for the government policy.

"I am assured from an absolutely trustworthy source," he says, "that Germany is ready to restore Belgium and Serbia, evacuate France, and with Turkey arrange an agreement with Russia over the free navigation of the Dardanelles. An agreement is also possible on the Polish question, as the Russian government knows."

The correspondent pictures England as the sole obstacle to peace.

There is reason to believe that the first part of his statement regarding negotiations between Russian and German socialists is correct, but his exposition of German peace terms conflicts with the recent highly official declaration of the North German Gazette that Germany is willing to conclude peace, but on terms compatible with the great sacrifice which she has made.

Von Reventlow Still Rages.

Count von Reventlow continues his campaign in the Tages Zeitung day in and day out, against any thought of a compromise peace which will not give to Germany in full measure what is demanded by the annexationists in both the east and the west. He expresses the hope that the renewal recently of the proposal for a peace conference by Count Czernin, the Austro-Hungarian foreign minister, which the socialists are now trying t oemphasize, has been buried definitely, saying it is undesirable to permit the western powers to have a hand in the Russo-German settlement. He intimates that Russia must reconcile herself to the loss of territories considered necessary for the future greatness of Germany, but that she may procure compensation elsewhere, probably in Rumania and Persia, which would enable her, he says, to consider honorable and advantageous terms of peace.

In another article Count von Reventlow breaks the lance with Foreign Secretary Zimmermann to whom he has transferred his old enmity against the foreign office. He asserts that it is now less than ever to the interest of Germany "to sing political serenades to the Japanese or attempt to use Carranza as a matchmaker." He warns against placing any hope in Japan. Although Germany and Japan to a certain extent are natural allies, the opportunity for an alliance has passed, he says, as Japan for the present probably will decide to maintain relations with Anglo-Saxon domination and continue to get all possible profits therefrom.

Newspaper Skeptical.

The Tageblatt, of Berlin, discussing Copenhagen dispatches relative to the presence here of Philipp Scheidmann, leader of the majority socialists, on a peace errand, mentions "a well known centerist member of the reichstag" as also taking a hand in the parleys.

The Tageblatt does not reveal his name but it probably would not be far wrong to identify him as Mathias Erzberger, leader of the clerical center, whose proclivity for dabbling in foreign affairs is well known. Furthermore the German government has been subsidizing heavily a propaganda bureau under his auspices. This bureau's function is to influence the tone of the neutral press and it is also directing propaganda in Italy and Rumania.

The Tageblatt exposes the hollowness of the denials with which the government, German socialisas and others concerned are endeavoring to shade the all too delicate plan of a separate peace effort with the Russian socialists from the light of publicity, which might perhaps wither it. The Tageblatt says the socialists who hitherto have voted regularly for the war credits may perhaps be welcomed less warmly by the Russian socialists than is hoped. It agrees with Count von Reventlow though for different reasons, in regarding the chances for success with skepticism.

TO MEET RUSSIAN ENVOYS.

Amsterdam, April 14.—A Vienna dispatch says that the Austrian parliament will be summoned to meet in the middle of May.

The German newspapers say that not only is Philip Scheidmann, leader of the majority socialists on his way to Stockholm, but that he is accompanied by three prominent German socialists, Addler, Erzberger and Haase. The four men are traveling on special passports and it is believed in Berlin socialist circles that they will meet envoys of the Russian government with whom they will proceed to Petrograd.

NEWS OF FORT WAYNE'S NEIGHBORS

Leesburg Woman Gives Two Daughters as War Brides.

Warsaw, Ind., April 14.—Rose, the seventeen-year-old daughter of Mrs. Obesa Sutton, of Leesburg, is a bride today, her sister, Katherine, is to wed Sunday night. The mother is preparing herself for the possible shock of the announcement of a third daughter, Nellie, 19 years old, who, she fears, may decide to make it unanimous.

Rose, the youngest daughter, was married today to Audrey Monroe, 20 years old, of Leesburg.

"I'm willing to give him up if the time comes that the country must have him to fight," said the young bride-to-be this morning at the court house.

"No, I'm not a slacker," said young Monroe. "I am not doing this to keep out of war for I'll go if they have to have me."

Katherine, the oldest daughter, is to be married Sunday night to Carl Coy, of Milford. Her sister said this morning that Katherine and Mr. Coy knew nothing of the intention of herself and Mr. Monroe to get married and it was a surprise and case of "beating them to it."

Mrs. Obesa Sutton, the mother, said she still has another daughter, Nellie, whom she may have to give up soon, too.

SOUTH MILFORD PATRIOTISM.

Raising of Flag Followed by a Big Meeting.

South Milford, Ind., April 14.—South Milford has felt the thrill of patriotism and a fund was raised in the town for a flag.

This flag was swung to the breeze from a hickory pole at the southeast corner of the square, and a patriotic meeting followed in the Pythian hall.

Hundreds of men, women and children crowded the hall, filling every foot of space and scores were turned from the doors.

Valorous L. Clear, Methodist Episcopal minister, was elected president of an organization which will co-operate with the county society organized last Saturday in Lagrange, and A. B. Cookerly, teacher in the South Milford school, was elected secretary.

Mr. Clear presided over the meeting. Charles L. DeBow, Methodist Episcopal pastor in Lagrange, and Frank J. Dunten were the orators of the evening and what they said was heard with enthusiasm.

SHOT IN BATTLE.

Decatur, Ind., April 14.—Clinton Kerr, son of Robert Kerr, of near Monroe, is the first American man to be reported among the wounded in the great world war. The story of his enlistment with a Canadian company New Year's day, 1916, was told a few days ago when it was also said that since January of this year he had been with the French troops, presumably taking part in the great battle of Arras, still in progress. Mr. Kerr, the father, has just received a telegram from Ottawa, Canada, stating that Clinton had been wounded on March 27th, when he was shot in the thigh. No further information was given and it is not even known just where he was taken. More news is anxiously expected by the parents and friends. Clinton was serving as flag sergeant at last reports.

SAID TO BE AT HOME.

Geneva, Ind., April 14.—A report published by the Kansas City Star concerning Mrs. Thurman Huey and B. F. Bowsman, who eloped from Geneva a few weeks ago, is denied by the woman's husband, who went to Kansas City after her. The Kansas City paper's report was to the effect that the court at Kansas City fined Bowsman and Mrs. Huey $200 each, after Mrs. Huey refused to return with her husband and expressed a preference to go to jail with Bowsman. According to Huey, his wife did not go to jail and returned home with him, and he reported also that Bowsman was not jailed and has returned.

Word of her demise was received here in a message by Eugene Iddings, a cousin, who departed for Peru Friday to atten dthe obsequies which will be conducted Saturday. Mrs. Bearss was a native of Kendallville, being born and reared in this city. In early life she was united in marriage to O. J. Bearss and for a number of years has been residing in Peru. Surviving besides her husband are two daughters, Mrs. Louis Andrews and Mrs. Charles Griswold, both of Peru. Mrs. Bearss will be remembered here by many of the older residents of the city.

LOOK FOR STICKER.

City Sealer Tolan Is Placing O. K. Labels on Pumps.

City Sealer C. B. Tolan will start out Monday morning to make a thorough test of gasoline pumps in Fort Wayne. He will carry a package of stickers and on each pump which he finds to be O. K. he will place one of the paper stamps. The label tells that the pump has been tested according to standard measures of Indiana and has been found to be accurate.

Tolan is making the test now because the automobile season is about to open in earnest. As a protection to auto drivers he suggests "look for the seal" when you purchase gas oline.

Test of the tanks about the city were made a few weeks ago by the city sealer and experts from the Wayne and Bowser Pump works. While all pumps were adjusted at that time to give accurate measurement the delicate devices sometimes get out of order in a short time and Tolan expects to make several tests of the filling stations during the year.

NATION'S FOOD CROPS MUST BE INCREASED

War Demands and World Food Shortage Should be Met by American Farmers —Efficient Production Imperative to Promote National Welfare —What Crops Should be Stressed and Where.

By DAVID FRANKLIN HOUSTON, Secretary of Agriculture.

Washington, D. C., April 14.—The secretary of agriculture, D. F. Houston, today has issued the following statement:

"The importance to the nation of a generously adequate food supply for the coming year cannot be overemphasized in view of the economic problems which may arise as a result of the entrance of the United States into the war. Every effort should be made to produce more crops than are needed for our own requirements. Many millions of people across the seas, as well as our own people, must rely in large part upon the products of our fields and ranges. This situation will continue to exist even though hostilities should end unexpectedly soon, since European production cannot be restored immediately to its normal basis. Recognition of the fact that the world at large, as well as our own consumers, must rely more strongly on American farmers this year than ever before should encourage them to strive to the utmost to meet these urgent needs.

Increase Yields of Staple Crops.

"It is obvious that the greatest and most important service that is required of our agriculture under existing conditions is an enlarged production of the staple food crops. Because of the shortage of such crops practically throughout the world there is no risk in the near future of excessive production such as sometimes has resulted in unremunerative prices to producers. This is particularly true of the cereals and of peas, beans, cow peas, soy beans and buckwheat. In view of the world scarcity of food, there is hardly a possibility that the production of these crops by the farmers of the United States can be too great this year, and there is abundant reason to expect generous price returns for all available surplus.

"The most effective step that may be taken to increase the production of these crops is to enlarge the acreage devoted to them in the regions where they are grown habitually. This expansion of acreage should be to the limit permitted by available good seed, labor and equipment. The placing of too great emphasis on production in new regions is inadvisable since the introduction into a farm operation of a crop not usually grown frequently involves practical difficulties not easily foreseen nor quickly surmountable.

"Taking the winter wheat territory as a whole, winter killing has occurred to an extent very much greater than usual. This, obviously, if not compensated for in some way, will mean a material reduction in the supplies of our most important bread cereal. Where winter wheat has been damaged sufficiently to justify the abandonment of fields, it should by all means be replaced by spring-planted food crops, preferably small grains or corn. The acreage of winter wheat seeded last fall is estimated at 40,080,000, or only 2 per cent above that of the preceding year (39,203,000 acres), and about one-eighth more than the average for the preceding five-year period (35,724,000). The condition of this crop, as shown by the department in its report of April 7, is more than 25 per cent below the average condition April 1 for the past ten years. This condition forecasts a production this year nearly 52,000,000 bushels less than that of 1916 and 243,000,000 bushels less than the crop of 1915.

"Climatic requirements of spring wheat during the last few weeks of its growth render it a more risky crop than others to plant outside the areas in which its production has been proved to be successful, so that it is not recommended for regions where oats or corn will be more certain to produce satisfactory yields. In the northern spring wheat states, however, where old ground has been reserved for flax and seed wheat is available, flax ground may well be sown with spring wheat and new land broken for flax where such land is available. In the Pacific northwest, where the seed supply of well adapted varieties is adequate, a considerably increased acreage of spring wheat appears probable. The spring wheat acreage of 1916 (17,956,000 acres) was more than 5 per cent less than that of 1915 (19,161,000 acres), and more than 4 per cent less than the preceding five-year average (18,799,000 acres).

Good Seed Wheat Necessary.

"The minimum quality of seed grain that should be relied upon under existing conditions is a very difficult point to decide. In general, it is not wise to risk planting seed wheat showing less than 75 or 80 per cent germination, nor that weighing less than fifty pounds to the bushel. If the land is prepared thoroughly and otherwise is suitable, the use of spring wheat weighing as low as forty-five pounds per bushel, if it shows good germination, may be advisable where better seed is lacking.

Usefulness of Oats and Barley.

"If land intended for spring wheat cannot be put into good condition early enough for seeding, oats or barley can be substituted to good advantage in the sections where these crops are known to do well. Barley can be relied on in the proved areas of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, the Dakotas and Montana, while oats have a much wider range. The ease with which barley may be substituted directly for wheat in human food and its usefulness to replace wheat milling by-products as food in the production of the milk supply, renders its abundant production important. Barley, where it succeeds, yields a larger weight of feed per acre than any other small grain crop. With an abundance of oats and barley available, much closer milling of wheat than at present could be practiced, if necessary, without endangering the milk supply which constitutes so important an element in the dietary of consumers.

Large Acreage of Rye Planted.

"The place of rye under present conditions is an important one. The crop this year should be harvested and utilized with more than the usual care. Considerable acreage is planted in some sections for plowing under in the spring for green manure. Where conditions are suitable part of this acreage might well be held for harvesting, and followed with a suitable summer or fall crop for plowing in later.

Buckwheat for Late Planting.

"Buckwheat may be planted later than any similar crop, and often does well on old meadows or waste land that can be broken after the more exacting crops are planted. In some sections where experience has demonstrated that the cereals, except rye, cannot be relied on, buckwheat is a crop of considerable importance. The acreage could well be increased, especially in portions of New York, Pennsylvania and New England, where the crop now is grown to a considerable extent.

Rice Gaining in Popularity.

"Rice at present prices provides more food value for the money than most of the other cereals. Fuller appreciation of its value should stimulate production quickly in Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas and California to an extent that would increase the total food supply greatly.

Increased Acreage of Grain Sorghums Warranted.

"The prices of the grain sorghums during the past season appear to warrant increase of acreage of these grains in the regions where they can succeed, as in western Kansas, Oklahoma and northern Texas. This increase should be practically to the limit of the acreage that can be handled properly with the labor and facilities available. Grain sorghum may well be used in that area to replace winter wheat on fields abandoned because of winter injury. The grain sorghums are but little known to eastern farmers, but are assuming importance rapidly in the drier portions of the country where corn and the small grains are unreliable because of frequent insufficiency of moisture. In the past these grains have been used chiefly as poultry and stock feed, but they have possibilities also as human food.

Flax for New Ground.

"Though flax is not primarily a food crop, the cake remaining when oil is expressed from the seed constitutes an important element in the dairy food supply. Its increased use in this way would release other grain products for use as food. As a crop peculiarly adapted to newly broken land in the spring wheat states where it is chiefly grown, the acreage of flax should be increased to the greatest extent possible.

Expand the Corn Acreage.

"Corn is the leading food and feed crop of the United States in geographic range of production, acreage and quantity of product. The vital importance of a large acreage of this crop properly cared for, therefore, is obvious. Because of the prices obtained for the last crop and the world demand for this grain, its profitableness to the American farmer during the approaching season is clear. The 105,954,000 acres planted to corn in 1916 yielded 2,583,000,000 bushels or more than 400,000,000 bushels less than the large crop of 1915—2,994,793,000 bushels—and considerably less than the five-year average—2,732,457,000 bushels. Conditions now warrant the planting of the largest acreage of this crop which it is possible to handle effectively.

"Although fall is the proper time for breaking sod for corn, there are many unproductive and foul meadows and indifferent pastures in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and the middle Atlantic and northeastern states that, under existing conditions can be broken now to advantage and planted to corn. The resulting reduction of hay and pasture would be more than replaced by the corn stover, ensilage and grain produced. Corn as a cultivated crop has been found well suited to replace summer fallowing in portions of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Wyoming and Montana, the forage and grain produced not materially reducing the succeeding grain crop.

Plant Early and Reduce Risk.

"Earliness of maturity, other factors being equal, is advantageous in the case of practically all grain crops. Relatively early maturing varieties should be selected where possible, and the planting should be done at the earliest suitable date. With the small grains an advance of three or four days in stage of maturity frequently saves a crop from serious damage by rusts. With corn a similar advantage is obtained by early maturity when severe droughts are encountered and when killing frosts occur toward the end of the season. Corn grown on the rich bottoms which constitute the best corn lands often is damaged by temporary overflow. If corn has an early start, however, it usually will attain a size which will make it possible to withstand overflows with less damage. Early plantings of corn if somewhat damaged by flood or frost, can be replanted even a second or third time with profit, if seed of early-maturing varieties is secured in advance of the time when needed.

Cow Peas and Soy Beans Valuable Food.

"The usefulness of cow peas and soy beans as human food has been recognized only recently in this country. Existing conditions warrant the planting of all the available seed of varieties known to do well in the several sections. The soy bean, in particular, has proved sufficiently resistant to cold in spring and to adverse weather during summer to warrant heavy planting, especially throughout the south.

"The value of the beans for oil production, as well as for human food, has become recognized so quickly and so generally during the past year that the crop has acquired a commercial standing far in excess of its previous status. While the commercial supply of seed late in March was estimated not to exceed 500,000 bushels, the quantity available on farms, where home-grown seed is held over in small lots for planting, undoubtedly will make possible a largely increased acreage.

Field Bean Prices Should Stimulate Production.

"The high food value of field beans and the shortage of supply due to the light yields of 1915 and 1916 render them of great importance in the regions to which they are adapted. This is especially the case in portions of the New England states, New York, Michigan and California, where the chief supply has been grown for many years, and in sections of Idaho, Colorado, New Mexico and other western states where beans have attained importance recently. The seed supply, while high in price, is well distributed. In order that especially good crops may result, beans should be planted under such conditions of soil as regards character and preparation as will insure efficient use of the seed supply.

Reserve Sufficient Hay, Forage and Pasture Land.

"A deficiency of hay and forage for the next winter would jeopardize the future meat and dairy supplies of the country and result in a shortage of roughage for military draft and saddle animals. In regions where dairying dominates, the full acreage of clover, alfalfa, and the grasses that is in productive condition should be maintained. Under the conditions prevailing in most dairying sections these crops can be carried with less man power than that required for tilled crops. The older, thinner and less productive grass lands, however, frequently can be made to produce much larger yields of feed in corn than if left as they are in unproductive grass. The seeding down of small grain fields for next year's mowing should by no means be neglected, for the maintenance of effective rotations of crops will be found as important in the future as in the past.

"For the gulf states perhaps no forage crop of which the available seed supply is relatively abundant exceeds the velvet bean in potential value. This legume possesses also the ability to make a crop when planted relatively late.

Potatoes and Vegetables.

"Seed potatoes should be conserved by planting on the best lands available for them and planning for thorough tillage and protection of the crop against disease and insect pests. Potatoes can be grown most advantageously near the centers of population in the northern states where transportation cost may be reduced to a minimum. This crop is capable of quick and large increase of production when conditions are favorable. There is, however, considerable risk of unprofitable production of potatoes when they are grown at long distances from the consuming markets, owing to their disproportionate weight and bulk of the product in comparison with the cereals.

"Such vegetable crops as carrots, rutabaga, turnips, onions and cabbage are worthy of much more attention than they generally receive, especially in the eastern United States. All these crops are capable of large production on suitable land under intensive culture throughout the more densely populated portions of the country. The supply of seed is ample and their culture relatively simple. The holding of these vegetables for the winter food supply is relatively easy where suitable inexpensive pits, cellars or lofts are prepared in time. The practicability of quickly drying vegetables for longer preservation was demonstrated on large scale last lear in western New York, where quantities were dried in the available apple evaporators and in quickly constructed dry kilns for export as army supplies. This was a repetition of the experience of the civil war period, when desiccated vegetables assumed considerable importance in the army ration and the equipment required for their preparation proved the forerunner of our present fruit drying equipment. Existing conditions warrant heavier planting than usual of staple winter vegetables in the sections where canneries and fruit evaporators exist and probably in some sections where the provision of such facilities later in the season may be justified.

"In the southern half of the country perhaps no crop has larger possibilities for quick increase of production of food for both men and animals than the sweet potato. Methods of handling and storing this product demonstrated and advocated by the department workers for several years make possible much fuller utilization of this crop than has occurred generally in the past.

"The peanut in many sections of the south also is capable of greatly enlarged production with little risk of over-supply, as it is in demand for oil and peanut butter manufacture as well as for direct use as food both for man and hogs.

Hold Seed for Replanting.

"While early planting is desirable, it is rarely advisable to risk the entire supply of seed in the first planting. This is particularly important with the tender, tilled crops, including corn, sorghum, beans, cow peas and soy beans. It is well to hold a fair proportion of seed in reserve against possible need, due to untimely frost or other destructive weather, at least until after the recognized danger period is passed. The availability of seed for immediate use when the need occurs frequently determines the practicability of replanting effectively. This is true also of reserve stocks of plants of tomatoes, sweet potatoes, early cabbage and other vegetables usually transplanted.

Possible Sweets for Domestic Production.

"Only about 20 per cent of the supply of sugar normally consumed in the United States is produced domestically, and this amount cannot be increased appreciably during the coming season. Unless normal imports of sugar reach our shores, therefore, a shortage of this food is inevitable. Supplemental sweets, however, may be produced more abundantly than in normal years and to some extent may take the place of sugar for the home use of farmers. Sirups from cane and sorghum constitute one of the most important groups of supplemental sweets. Wherever these crops can be grown farmers may find it to their advantage to plant acreage sufficient to furnish materials for the home manufacture of at least a sufficient supply of syrup to meet family needs. In many parts of the country honey production may be increased by closer attention to bee culture.

Increase Farm Production of Vegetables, Poultry and Dairy Products.

"The high prices for foodstuffs that have prevailed during the last few months have stimulated interest in the increase of home supplies of vegetables, poultry and dairy products on farms. This interest has been quickened most noticeably in the south, where for several years this department and the states through their extension workers have urged such an increase as necessary for economic reasons even under normal conditions. Other parts of the country have responded to these appeals, but emphasis on this feature should be continued by all agencies in position to operate effectively.

"Through increased attention to poultry on farms it is possible to add quickly and materially to the food supply. Because of the importance of an increased supply of eggs, under present exigencies, farmers should not market hens of the egg breeds, such as the Leghorns, which are less than three years old, or of the larger breeds which are less than two years old. By the immediate preservation of eggs for home consumption through the use of water glass or lime water, larger supplies of fresh eggs may be made available for marketing later in the season, when production is less and prices higher. Every person who raises chickens, from the novice to the poultry husbandman, should see that infertile eggs are produced and all surplus marketed promptly so as to eliminate waste through spoilage.

Increase Production Off the Farms.

"When conditions render it feasible small flocks of poultry should be kept by families in villages, towns and especially in the suburbs of large cities. The need for this extension of poultry raising is particularly great where consumption exceeds production, as in the northeastern states. Through utilization of table waste, scraps and other refuse as poultry feed, much wholesome food in the form of eggs and poultry for home use may be produced at relatively low cost. Many families in villages and on the outskirts of cities also should consider the advisability of keeping a pig if sanitary regulations permit. In most cases, however, it will be profitable to keep a pig only when a sufficient surplus from the household and the garden is available to furnish a considerable portion of the pigs' food.

"Consumers living in villages and in the suburbs of cities do not appreciate sufficiently the possibility of adding materially to their food supply by utilizing suitable idle soil in yards, vacant lots and unused outlying fields. The total contribution to the food supply of families and communities which can be brought about through such activities is great. Gardening is peculiarly an activity in which the family and the community may share with resultant mutual helpfulness and benefit.

"The duty of the individual farmer at this time is to increase his production, particularly of food crops. If he has control of tillable land not in use, or money lying idle, or labor unemployed, he should extend his operations so as to employ those resources to the fullest extent. This does not mean that he should rob his land, waste his capital, or expend his labor fruitlessly, but that by wise planning and earnest effort he should turn out a greater quantity of food crops than ever before. He will not lose by it, and he will perform an important service in supporting his country in the task that lies before it. The agricultural sufficiency of a nation is not attained unless as the units which compose it are efficient. Those agricultural workers who produce, conserve and market wisely will help toward the achievement of national agricultural sufficiency, and thus will perform valuable service for the nation."

Matt. 18:7-14.

7 Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!
8 Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire.
9 And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire.
10 Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven.
11 For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost.
12 How think ye? if a man have a hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray?
13 And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not astray.
14 Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.

Sunday, April 15—Luke 15:1-10.

1 Then drew near unto him all the publicans and sinners for to hear him.
2 And the Pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them.
3 And he spake this parable unto them, saying,
4 What man of you, having a hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?
5 And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing.
6 And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, saying unto them, Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep which was lost.
7 I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance.
8 Either what woman having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it?
9 And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost.
10 Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.

SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1917.

Will Go Farther Than the War.

The mobilization of America's food resources, now setting in with strong tide, will go farther than any mere expedient of war. That will be one of the best consequences of it. We have been growing too little food in this country. We have been wasting too much food. We have been permitting ourselves to drift along on increasing currents of extravagance. We have been counting our money—and spending it—with no thought for the future. Meanwhile there has been an unremitting tendency of the cost of living to rise.

War is opening the eyes and stirring the intelligence of the countr yto actualities. If we are to fight and not get licked we have got to feed our fighters—and our fighters, as in this case it falls out, are not all of them Americans, not any of them as yet Americans. We have got to feed to a large extent practically all the world with which we fight. During the past year we have had scarcely enough with which to feed ourselves. It is easy and smug to lay the charge of this to shortage of crops—wheat and potatoes, corn and cabbage. But we know somewhat better than that. The stringencies we now find ourselves up against in the matter of foodstuffs and the prices we are now paying for what we consume marshal the proofs that we have been negligent, unthinking, thankless. Half the land we have that is tillable lies untilled. Such land as is worked we permit ourselves the guiltiness of producing too little. Of a large part of what we gather we make a vast and sinful waste.

War is going to grind the edge of our necessities to a sharper edge. If the conflict in which we now have a part shall be prolonged we shall know something of what Germany and France and Great Britain—all countries that have had in common with us the possession of great wealth—have gone through, are going through and have yet to go through. Out of this war we shall come with some chastening of spirit, some uplifting of ideals, some understanding sense of the immutable laws of morals and economy that in our blindness of pride we have sought to revoke or suspend for the better ease of our own case.

National security now is prodding and spurring us to knowledge of the worst of our flagrancies, the besetting sins of our preventable and happily still remediable weaknesses. We shall come through—albeit it turns out now to be no soft task to get ourselves awake and wholly accountable. The war will leave us poorer but better, sadder but wiser than when it came suddenly and unbidden upon us. As a cost even of billions and perhaps some hard-levied tribute of blood it will not have been a price out of reason if it shall teach us the greater of some of the things we are in pitiable need to know.

Whether it shall be the policy of the government to confiscate or to pay for the German merchant vessels seized at the outbreak of war, they will be a great convénience and a vast start toward the development of the American merchant marine. The damaged machinery can be repaired in a few months or a year and no vessel like for instance the Vaterland could be slipped from the ways for several years. We shall be looking up right smart on the seas before long.

Congress appears to be entirely ready to provide seven billions of money to finance the war. Congress should also be as ready to provide a military system that will make unnecessary a wanton waste of a great part of the seven billions.

Seven billions for the first year of the war ought to be given some standing as a guarantee of good faith.

WAR AND CHILD MORALITY.

The United Board of Sunday School sof England has been making a study of the effects of the war upon child life. It was learned that juvenile delinquency in London has increased 40 per cent. "The war has created an excitement in the minds of the children," says Cecil M. Chapman, the metropolitan magistrate. Sir Edward Troup, of the home office, has issued a circular to the magistrates in which he states that he "has under consideration representations respecting the recent increase in the number of offenses by children and young persons under sixteen years of age."

"Punishable offenses have grown in seventeen of the largest towns of England about 40 per cent.," and he adds, "the increase of nearly 50 per cent. in cases of larceny, but there are also more charges of assault, malicious damage, gaming and offenses against the educational acts." The causes for this "loss of discipline," which is widely commented upon, are the absence of fathers who are in the army; depreciation of the school influence on account of shortage of teachers and keeping school only part time; the leaving of school for work at an earlier age, there being now from one hundred and fifty to two hundred thousand children between the ages of eleven and thirteen released from school to do wartime work; a low type of patriotism based upon force and self-interest and not upon love, with which the children are made too familiar.

He is a pronounced Cleveland man and says that there is practically but one sentiment on the presidential question among the democrats of northern Indiana."

JOHN A. LAPP,
Director of the Indiana Bureau of Legislative Information.

(Copyright 1917 by John A. Lapp.)

The procedure in admitting a new state to the Union has been to pass an enabling act by congress which autnorizes the people of a given territory to form a constitution and when the constitution is formed to admit the territory by act of congress into the Union.

In 1815 congress passed an enabling act authorizing the territory of Indiana to frame a new constitution and thus to get ready to join the Union as one of the states. The people of the territory sent delegates to a convention which met at Corydon, June 10, 1816, and framed the first constitution. The convention was in session only twenty days. The constitution was approved by congress and Indiana was admitted to the Union. The people's part in framing the first constitution consisted merely in electing delegates to the convention. They did not vote upon the adoption of the constitution.

The new constitution was not an original document, but was copied largely from the constitutions of the United States, and of Kentucky and Ohio. That a state constitution could be worked out in twenty days indicated that it was mostly copied from other sources.

Almost from the time the first constitution was adopted proposals for a new constitution were heard. The people voted several times on the question of calling a convention and finally in 1849, by an overwhelming vote, approved the plan and the second convention composed of delegates elected by the people, met in Indianapolis Oct. 7, 1850. This convention contained many able men, among whom may be mentioned Robert Dale Owen, Schuyler Colfax, John Petit, George W. Carr, the president of the convention, Alvin P. Hovey, James Lockhart, Thomas Walpole, Horace P. Biddie and Michael P. Bright. Mr. William H. English was the principal secretary of the convention.

The work of framing a new constitution was completed in 126 days and the people approved the new document by a vote of 113,230 to 27,638.

Since 1852 only eight changes have been made in the constitution. One was adopted in 1873 relating to the Wabash and Erie canal bonds and seven were adopted in 1881. During these years over four hundred and eighty-five amendments were proposed by the legislature but owing to the extreme difficulty of amendment not one was adopted.

After many futile efforts to get proposed amendments through two general assemblies and then to secure a majority of all the voters at the election (not a majority voting on the question) an effort was made by Governor Marshall in 1911, for a short cut to a new constitution by having the legislature submit a revision directly to the people. The state supreme court declared the method unconstitutional and we were left without recourse except by calling a convention. In 1913 the legislature submitted the question to the people, "Shall a constitutional convention be called in 1915" and the people voted "No."

But the need was so apparent to every thinking person that the adverse vote did not deter the legislature of 1917 from calling a convention without submitting the question to a vote. Close observers have expressed the opinion that if it had been submitted, it would be carried by an overwhelming vote so generally has the necessity come to be recognized.

The call for the convention directs that an election be held on the 18th of September, 1917, at which time one hundred and fifteen delegates shall be elected. Fifteen of these delegates are to be elected by the whole state and one hundred by the representative districts, each district electing as many as it now elects as representatives in the general assembly.

There can be no party nominations or party emblems in the election. Delegates are nominated by petition only. The petition of the district delegates must contain 200 signatures and of the delegates at large 50 from each of the 13 congressional districts or 650 in all. These petitions must be filed in the office of the secretary of state between July 20th and August 19th, 1917.

The judge of the circuit court appoints the election officials consisting of one inspector and two clerks in each precinct at least ten days before the election. In other respects the provisions relating to general elections apply. The names will be rotated on the ballot so that each will appear at the top an equal number of times thus preventing any candidate from having advantage of the top position.

Every male voter of the state may vote at this election and every woman who is a citizen of the state and having the qualification of residence required of a voter, may vote. All persons must be registered in order to vote and the registration board will be in session at the court house in every county seat at least between June 21st and August 20th. The registration boards are the same as at a general election which under the new law consist of the clerk of the circuit court and two persons appointed by him upon the nomination of the two leading political parties. This board appoints the clerk of registration and a deputy clerk of registration and other necessary assistants who are on duty at the office of the board on all working days. Any person may register in person at the office by filling out a blank answering a number of questions or he may fill in the blank, swear to it and send it to the board. Blanks will be furnished from the office of the board.

At the election, women vote the same as men, but the ballots are put in separate boxes and counted separately. It appears that this was done as a precaution so that if by chance the act granting women the right to vote should be declared void the women's vote could be separated and the result of the men's vote be determined separately. When a voting machine is used it will be necessary to have separate machines for the women or else a ballot box for the women's vote in which case the men could vote by machine and the women by paper ballots.

The result of the election for the state and for each district will be certified to the secretary of state and the fifteen delegates at large who receive the highest number of votes in the state and the candidates in each district who receive the largest number of votes will be declared elected.

The elected delegates will assemble in the capitol, January 14th, 1918, and proceed to organize by the election of the necessary officers and assistants. The convention will pass rules for its procedure, appoint committees and conduct its business in much the same form as a legislative body, but with far greater deliberation. All of their acts will be submitted to the people for their ratification or rejection. Thus the people have the final say. The convention may submit the questions together or separately but if it decides to submit a question at all, forty-five delegates may require that that question shall be submitted separately. The advantage of separate submission is that each question may be decided on its merits and the people will not have to take all or reject all.

When the convention has completed its work, the members determine how and when the questions shall be submitted to the people. They may decide in favor of a special election or they may decide upon the date of the regular election as the time for submission. Opinion seems to favor the special election because the people can then pass upon the question and avoid the turmoil of the regular election.

C. E. PLANS RECITAL AND ENTERTAINMENT

Miss Minerva Manchester to Give Readings from Comedy and Drama.

The Christian Endeavor society of the Third Presbyterian church of the city will give a fine entertainment next Friday, April 20, at 8 o'clock in the church auditorium. The principal artist procured will be Miss Minerva Manchester, of New York City, who will be in Fort Wayne on that date.

Miss Manchester is making a tour across Indiana and the Third church society considers itself very fortunate in securing her services for the evening. She will give a miscellaneous recital from a number of comedy and dramatic writers as well as one sacred number. She has a fine reputation as a reader and dramatic story teller, and can point to an unusual number of "return engagements." Miss Manchester has a natural gift of humor and good cheer, together with a very unusual personality. This means that she will delight her audience, and give them that touch of humor and pathos which will make them leave, hoping to hear her at another date.

Beside Miss Manchester, there will be an excellent musical program for the occasion, composed of artists of the city, and the young people feel confident that the entertainment will be much appreciated by the listeners as well as giving them an extra fine evening of enjoyment. The admission will be twenty-five cents for the elder people and fifteen cents for children.

A. C. W. NOTES

For the Week.

If you are a committee chairman, in your society, of devotional, missionary, social, lookout and good-citizenship work you are a member and will have a voice in the A. C. W. general committee meeting at the Third Presbyterian church at 7:45 on Thursday evening. Do you realize that you are a salesman? All salesmen are not on a par, and if you are the means of giving a suggestion to your brother salesman it will help and you may get an idea that will be welcome to your society. Have you found a best method for your committee? How many sales of Christ's love have you made since last Saturday?

For the Future.

On the national recruiting day, which has been set for April 18, the slogan will be "Wake Up America!" We also understand that nation-wide prohibition will be asked for. This will meet with the approval of millions of our people and will go down through the ages as one of the greatest events for rejoicing that the people under the Stars and Stripes have had since Lincoln's proclamation. We can use that phrase and say with them, "Wake Up A. C. W." to the possibilities of fifteen hundred young people as a unit for the selling of Christ's love to the other fellow. President Wilson opens his cabinet meetings with prayer and most of our societies follow this also. Can't you see the president's cabinet on their knees? Does not this vision inspire you? After having decided to go to war the very first thing she did was to finance the proposition. Financing any project is the first step toward planning and a good many of us are using this suggestion to advantage.

For the Individual Members.

As I look back to the time when as a member of a young people's I came to the regular meetings it occurs to me that it was a brother member who gave me the vision of what there was to do. For a time I was interested in the way our work was handled, and one day a young lady asked me to help her in giving an entertainment. This seemed to open the page to a very great many possibilities, some of which are not worked out yet. It has been suggested that the story of how you became a worker in young people's would be helpful to the other fellow. I will print the first five testimonies which reach me before next Friday noon. Put them on 8½x11 regular size paper and not more than eighty words. Your name will be withheld if you so desire. (This will show how many read the column. I hope it takes two weeks to print them). Mail these to 716 Columbia.

Our Rally at Simpson.

One cannot help but feel the undercurrent of awakening in all departments of our work. Last week it was stated that West Jefferson won the cup—which was an error. The winning society was West Creighton and we beg your pardon. The state president of W. C. T. U. gave a splendid address which, while it might have been shorter in length, had a message for young people to take home with them. We heard many compliments on the colored singers. The sketch by our temperance committee had an excellent point and demonstrated the evils of the bar. That was fine, Davis. Plans for the June rally are under way. Societies! give plenty of room for this great meeting in your announcements. It looks like we will hold the rally outdoors. Plan to bring that friend—he will enjoy the crowd and you will enjoy the inspiration. Rev. Merton S. Rice, of Detroit, soon to leave for Europe to preach a world doctrine to the soldiers in the trenches, said: "The whole problem of our social life is to tie the strength of the world to the weakness of the world."

Our Easter Vesper at West Jefferson.

There was quite a few churches represented and in response to call for announcements many individual members showed their hearts were full of desire for their own societies' success and told of the 6:30 meeting. That is fine. Mr. Burson, of Third Presbyterian, gave one of his earnest talks which are always helpful. His heart is in the work. Miss Grace Erwin, of West Jefferson, talked on consecration and devotion and gave us several points worth remembering. The First Evangelical quartet rendered a selection of special music. We all join in our appreciation to everyone who helped in this service.

Communications.

Alliance, Ohio, is thinking of organizing their young people. We are getting out copies of our constitution for them. This is fine, Alliance.

Mr. Davis says that Logansport young folks are sending thanks for the word we sent them last week and will sure be glad to have us come down and see them. Now this is real work that counts and God wants us to "go unto all the world and spread the gospel." For the readers out of town—our organization means standardized methods for winning young people into His work.

We regret to receive the word about our lookout committee chairman Mowever, Miss Werling has been made president of her society at Bethany Presbyterian and a chairman shall be elected to take her place immediately.

GARDEN DEPARTMENT.

What is the home without flowers or gardens. The Wildwood is unusually fortunate to secure an exceptionally valuable article on Don't for the lovers of flowers from the pen of William J. Vesey, jr. 15c per copy on all newsstands or by mail, 50c per year.

The Sophio B. Wright circle's dancing party on April 24, at the Anthony hotel, takes on new interest in the announcement that it is to be a Red Cross benefit. This circle of energetic young women usually works for the benefit of some good cause and the Visiting Nurse league and other charities have been grateful more than once for aid received. The first plan of this dance was to be a novelty affair and it will be in more ways than one. First, expense will be eliminated as much as possible. There will be no favors, but the best of dance music will be played by Mr. Wright and other members of his saxaphone orchestra, of Columbus. The orchestra has appeared at dancing affairs in this city before and made themselves popular. The members of the circle will be dressed in white and black, no colors, but guests are not requested to follow that example unless they want to. The admission tickets are in the form of invitations and are not above the common price for such affairs.

TAILORED COAT SUIT.

(By Betty Brown.)

New York, April 14.—The "three-piece" suit is one of those garments which are so frequently misnamed in the world of fashion. It is only a one-piece frock or jumper dress with a matching coat.

One of the best designs of the season is shown in today's illustration. The skirt has the least suggestion of carving over the hips, and the coat has the latest "swing" which is produced by suspending the fullness from the shoulders.

FORESEES TIME TO ENJOY OUR IDEALS

Theosophist R. W. Smith Discusses the Life on Higher Plane.

A very interesting time awaits the man of reasonable desires after death, according to Mr. Ralph W. Smith, who discoursed last night at the Theosophical society on what are alleged to be the actual facts of life in the unseen world. "We must bear in mind," said the speaker, "that the majority of men spend the greater part of their waking life and most of their strength in work that they really do not like, that they would not do at all if it were not necessary in order to earn their living, or support those who are dependent upon them. Realize the condition of the man when all necessity for this grinding toil is over, when it is no longer needful to earn a living, since the astral body requires no food nor clothing nor lodging. If he is a worker, he will work, but then for the first time since his childhood that man is free to do precisely what he likes, and can devote his whole time to whatever may be his chosen occupation—so long, that is, as it is of such a nature as to be capable of realization without physical matter. Suppose that a man's greatest delight is in music: upon the astral plane he has the opportunity of listening to all the grandest music that earth can produce, and is even able t ohear far more in it than before, since here other and fuller harmonies than our dull ears can grasp are now within his reach. The man whose delight is in art, who loves beauty in form and color, has all the loveliness of this higher world to choose from. If his delight is in beauty in nature, he has unequalled possibilities for indulging it, for he can readily and rapidly move from place to place, and enjoy in quick succession wonders of nature which the physical man would need years to visit. And there is no fatigue, for it is the brain and the muscle that tires; the mind unhampered, is tireless."

A STUNNING COAT

New York, April 13.—Daring coloring distinguishes the most attractive of the silk street suits.

Disks embroidered in gorgeous hues make the sports dress illustrated above a particularly charming creation. But the final touch of fashion comes from the new girdle which encircles the waist twice and is knotted low down in the back. Its ends are not tied. One end is merely drawn over the other in a loop.

The colors most in vogue for embroidery are purple, Oriental, such as Chinese red, jade green, mandarin yellow and lapis blue. Just at present a dash of brilliant red is introduced into costumes of almost any color whether designed for house or street garments.

OPERETTA PROVES BIG SUCCESS.

Principals and Choruses in the "Lost Princess" Did Wonderful Work for Amateurs.

The operetta benefit for Hope hospital, "The Lost Princess," attracted a large audience to the Majestic theater on Friday evening and proved to be musically and in its presentation a real delight, not because it was done by local people and because everyone in the audience had friends or children in the cast, but because it was a performance of so much genuine merit with many charming and lovely things about it. The musical score is original and singable and singers and orchestra shared the praise of the director, Mrs. Hortense Reynolds, who has a way of "hypnotizing" those whom she directs in presenting an operetta and so gets wonderful results. The cast was a fine one and while many praises might be truthfully written about each one individually, such a notice must of necessity be brief. The leading role, Bo-Peep, the Princess, was sung by Mrs. Helen Cutler Dickey, who has the voice, the personality and the imagination to give the part the character necessary. Mrs. H. H. Rogers as Mother Goose and Miss Ruth Gumpper as the Queen of Hearts were other feminine roles that were sung and acted on the same high order of presentation. Earl Thompson, one of the city's best baritones, had a part calling for singing and comedy talent, both of which he displayed, and Albert Gessler in the more sentimental role of the lover appreciated his opportunities. Mr. Thompson and Charles Konvalinka and Miss Maribel Olds had the comedy roles and "made good," returning again and again to encores. Miss Olds and her bunch of children made a continual hit all the time they were on the stage. Miss Virginia Cary as Red Ridinghood stepped momentarily from fairyland and Rush McClure was equally easy and capable. D. B. Douglass made a capital King Cole and Anne Weaver as a herald spoke lines with the distinction of a little actress. As for the choruses they were remarkably well done. The maids in the garden, the herdsmen, the dairymaids and the cooks, the children who lived in a shoe and the children who were the neighbors, the Boy Scouts, the Mary contraries, the chickens, the housemaids, the chefs, the marigolds, the grape maidens, the jumping jacks, little Regine Minsky as the cattail and the dancers, led by Ellen Hudson, each and all went on and off the stage in fanciful and appropriate character costume with a grace and beauty that did not depend on dazzling light effects but were expressive of youth, enthusiasm, imagination and delight in doing something to help somebody else and also with a most appreciable understanding that they were a part of Mother Goose and her followers. It was an astonishingly good performance for amateur work and it smacked of the professional in many instances, both in beauty and in execution. Miss Constance Bogart, the piano accompanist for the rehearsals and production, deserves high praise for her work, while the orchestra followed Mrs. Reynolds so closely that it would never have been concluded that but one rehearsal had been held. The entertainment closed with a tableau of Columbia by Miss Winifred Ellingham and entire cast while the orchestra played "The Star-Spangled Banner" and the audience rose and sang one verse. The programs of patriotic appearance were unusually good-looking as well as being a financial success. Mrs. Darwin S. Myers had entire charge of that work. Other people, grownups and young folks who have put in weeks of work and hours of practice, including the skill and ability of the director of the performance, Mrs. Reynolds, and the stage manager, Miss Hortense Porter, are Mesdames Hudson, Johns, Fauve, Poltier, Keegan, Shryock, Rohan, J. Stunning Spring Cape.

(By Betty Brown.)

New York, April 13.—There's charm about the new spring capes which makes them positively irresistible. One of the handsomest as well as the most practical of the season's models is made of gray gabardine and is lined with navy blue gabardine, and the result is a garment which is practically reversible. It is a feminine version of a military model and is designed for motoring but can be put to many other uses.

The smart little toque worn with this cape is uniquely ornamented in Spanish fashion.

By BIDDY BYE.

Cheese contains over 25 per cent. more protein than the same weight of porterhouse steak as purchased, and nearly twice as much fat. Most housewives now give cheese its proper place among economical foods, but not all cooks know how to make out bills of fare which are quite satisfactory, using cheese as the central food. Uncle Sam's experts, however, have made many experiments along this line, and they recommend the following:

Menu No. 1—Macaroni and cheese; raisin bread or date bread; orange and water-cress salad; baked apples; sugar cookies; cocoa.

Menu No. 2—Cheese fondue; toast, zwieback, or thin and crisp baking powder biscuit; celery; potatoes, baked, boiled, or fried in deep fat; peas, or some other fresh vegetables; coffee; fruit salad with crisp cookies or meringues.

Menu No. 3—Clear soup; Baked eggs with cheese; baked potatoes; lettuce salad; a sweet jelly, crab apple or quince for example, or a preserve; rye bread; orange and banana shortcake; tea.

HELP UNCLE SAM BY PRESERVING EGGS.

Women's most important work in wartime is doing the thing which is nearest at hand. Conserving the nation's food supply is work which is always at hand. It can be practiced three times a day, and at irregular intervals in the week. In the way of storing or packing food for future use.

April, May and June make the great egg producing season of the year. This is the time for all those who keep hens to preserve the surplus stock of eggs for next fall and winter. And it is often wise for housewives who buy eggs to invest in dozens of the strictly fresh kind, at spring prices and store them against a coming H. C. of L. crisis.

The quality of the eggs laid in the spring is better than at any other time of the year. In other months eggs should be put down the day they are laid.

For the farmer, or person who wants to preserve a few eggs for his own use, the easiest and perhaps the best method which can be employed is the use of water glass or sodium silicate. This water glass is a syrupy liquid which should be mixed one part water glass to nine parts water which has been previously boiled. The solution should be kept in a clean receptacle, such as a crock, or stone jar. Kegs or barrels may be used, provided they are scalded thoroughly and are absolutely free from odors. After the jar has been partially filled with the water glass solution the eggs can be put in from day to day, and should remain at least two inches below the surface of the solution.

Eggs put down in this manner and stored in a cool, dark place will come out during the following winter as a very good article of food.

One gallon of water glass will make solution to cover nearly 50 dozen eggs. The commercial water glass is used for preserving eggs, as it is much cheaper than the chemically pure article.

Eggs also can be preserved in lime water, salt, patent egg preservatives, or they can be greased and stored in sawdust or bran. But eggs packed in salt are liable to lose as much as 33 per cent by evaporation, while those which are greased sometimes lose 25 per cent. Moreover, they may become tainted, while eggs preserved in water glass are not only satisfactory after having been packed away for months, but also when kept for three or four weeks after removal from solution.

Most packed eggs will not beat up well for cake making or frosting, while eggs taken from a water glass solution seem quite equal to the average fresh eggs to be had in the markets. Their shells, however, are apt to crack in boiling. It is said that this can be prevented by piercing the larger end of the egg with a needle before putting it into the water.

If it is desired to preserve eggs in limewater, the solution may be prepared by placing 2 or 3 pounds of unslacked lime in 5 gallons of water and allowing the mixture to stand until the lime settles and the liquid is clear. The eggs should be placed in a clean earthenware jar or other suitable vessel and covered with the clear limewater. Sometimes a pound of salt is used with the lime, but it is said that such a mixture imparts a slight taste of lime to the eggs.

Other articles by Biddy Bye on wartime economics in the kitchen will be published from day to day.

WANT MORE SHOOTERS.

President E. A. Wagner Appoints Membership Committee.

Because of the warlike conditions in the country and the unpreparedness of the eligible timber for armies, E. A. Wagner, president of the Fort Wayne Rifle club has appointed a membership committee with a view of bringing in a lot of young fellows and learning them how to shoot and handle arms. The Rifle club has a five target indoor range in the basement of the big store house building at the General Electric works and an arrangement with Company E for the use of the outdoor range a mile or two north of the city. Thus every facility for target practice will be offered the members of the Rifle Club and President Wagner believes its membership will be greatly increased within the next week or two. VAST RESOURCES OF NATION FOR BATTLE

Munitions Concerns Show Mighty Capacity for Making Shells.

Washington, April 14.—The navy department made public today bids received from twenty-five munitions makers on an order for 1,578,000 shells of all calibres, the figures bringing out sharply the enormous capacity of American plants. Eleven bidders each offered to absorb the entire order for 1,170,000 one-pounder projectiles and within a few weeks to begin deliveries at the rate of from 100,000 to 500,000 shells a month. There were six separate proposals covering the entire order for 3,000 14-inch shells. The bids show also a capacity to produce 30,000 six-inch shells, 2,500 14-inch and about the same number of 12-inch shells a month after the machinery is set in motion. The Bridgeport projectile company bid on all classes of shells up to 6-inch and showed a monthly output of 1,200 of the largest type and 100,000 one-pounder shells within a short time.

The Baldwin Locomotive works could begin delivery of 14-inch shells within one hundred days and turn out 500 a month thereafter. The Bethlehem Steel company could deliver 750 big shells a month, beginning within a year and within ten days could deliver five-inch, four-inch and three-inch shells at a rate of 10,000 a month. The Washington Steel and Ordnance company is prepared to deliver 100 14-ihch and 100 12-inch shells within six weeks and turn out one-pounder projectiles at a rate of from 3,000 to 5,000 a day thereafter.

SPAIN BEGINS TO FEEL THE FEVER OF WAR

Madrid, April 14.—Foreign Minister Gimeno has announced that the protest of German yin regard to the sinking of the Spanish steamer San Fulgencio was sent to the Spanish ambassador in Berlin in a diplomatic pouch and not transmitted through the German ambassador at Madrid. The gravity of the situation is emphasized by all the newspapers. The semi-official Diario Universal, after saying that the ministers reached a unanimous decision as to the course of the government at a cabinet meeting Thursday, continues: "We do not know what their decisions are, but we realize that their importance is such as to produce a complete solidarity of the cabinet. The moment is grave for Spain which no longer can abstract herself from the reverberations of the events transpiring around her."

GERMAN REVERSE GETS ON NERVES OF THE PEOPLE

Amsterdam, April 14.—The military critic of the Vossische Zeitung of Berlin writes that he has received many letters which prove that "the nerves of many readers are beginning to give way." He dwells on the "unfounded" excitement which he states is spreading among those at home and warns the public not to judge the situation from single events, but to take events as a whole into consideration.

Head of German Alliance Says He is for America Against Germany.

Cleveland, O., April 14.—That German-Americans will not join in the intensive farming movement on the ground that it would help Great Britain and her allies, was the assertion of Herman Fellinger, a member of Mayor Davis' war board, here today. "All German-Americans, while they are backing America as against Germany, are praying for the defeat of Great Britain and her allies," said Fellinger. "It is too much to expect from them to raise foodstuffs for her allies."

Following a statement by Myron T. Herrick, chairman of the board, in attempting to restore order, that Fellinger's attitude was misunderstood and that Fellinger and all other German-Americans were loyal, Fellinger maintained that this was true, but that he could not do otherwise than hope for the defeat of the allies.

Fellinger is president of the German-American alliance.

PENNSY EMPLOYES SHOW PATRIOTISM

If there were any suspicions of disloyalty to country among the Pennsylvania employes in the minds of any, they were surely dispelled by the patriotic demonstrations at the big shop at noon Saturday and again at 4:30 o'clock at the round house, when dedicatory exercises for a number of flags that had been erected in the past week were held. Each was attended by thousands of people, the greater portion being the employes of the company and members of their families.

The greatest of the demonstrations, of course, was on Holman street, where nine flags were dedicated as follows: The master mechanic's office building, the superintendent's building, the machine shop, the erecting shop, the boiler shop, the tin and pipe shop, the blacksmith shop, the planning mills and the power plant.

The first feature of the day, which was not on the program, was the assembling at the Pennsylvania passenger station on Baker street of the fifty of sixty men employed in the night gang at the erecting and machine shops, and lead by the First regiment drum corps, marched to Clinton street and through the shops, each man carrying an American flag. This demonstration was made ten minutes before the hour appointed for the closing of the shop and it created such enthusiasm among the shopmen that they were evidently incapable of further work and orders were given to blow the whistle.

At this moment, the Elks' band, which had just arrived on the scene, started up a patriotic air and the shopmen, each in his working clothes and face and hands begrimmed with dirt, came pouring out of the Barr street entrance and lined up in front of the speakers' stand, where they remained throughout the exercises interesting and enthusiastic listeners to the speeches.

Before the speaking began, Battery B and Company E arrived on the scene and formed on the vacant lot opposite the stand, while hundreds of ladies, gentlemen and children lined up on the sidewalk and street, making a solid mass of humanity extending over a distance of 300 or 400 feet. Handsome programs, bearing on the title page, a colored picture of the American flag and on the inner pages the songs "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America," were passed out among the audience and will be preserved as souvenirs of the patriotic demonstration. The program was as follows:

Selections—Elks' band.
Song, "America"—Assemblage.
Remarks by chairman—W. H. Moeller.
Introductory remarks—Master Mechanic E. E. Griest.
Address—Rev. A. J. Folsom.
Song, "Star Spangled Banner"—Blacksmiths' quartette.
Call to colors—Bugler Co. E.
Hoisting of colors—Capt. Ray McAdams, Co. E.
"Star Spangled Banner"—Elks' band.
President's salute, twenty-one guns—Battery B., Capt. J. C. Sheffer.

Following the exercises, the shopmen, lead by the band and Company E, marched around the block on which the main part of the plant is located, saluting and cheering as they passed each flag.

The committemen to whom much of the credit for the excellent patriotic demonstration is due W. H. Moeller, A. J. Johnson, P. E. Bresnahan, J. H. Deck, F. S. Dorolt, O. J. Farnan, E. E. Griest, J. H. Hobrock, J. P. Labbe and C. Miller.

E. E. Griest's Speech.

Mr. Griest in his introductory remarks, emphasized the importance of the railways and all their departments, including the shops, to the government in case of war. He said:

"Ladies and Gentlemen: I am delighted to see this great gathering of patriotic citizens. One can not doubt the loyalty of the employes of the Pennsylvania, or how they stand on the very important matter that is giving all of us grave concern.

"You have probably already noticed that I am not accustomed to public speaking, and it is not my intention to compete with such worthy orators as we have with us today. I only wish that I had the power of oratory possessed by these gentlemen who are to follow, as I have two matters of great moment that I would like to drive home.

"From reports issued by the government, I have been convinced that there is, right now, a food shortage in this country, and this fact is further brought out by the prices we are paying for the necessities of life. It is difficult to estimate the value to our country of any service that will add to the food supply. Large numbers of our good young men from the farms are enlisting, and, thus, instead of being producers of life's necessities, they are becoming consumers. This will further add to the food shortage. It seems essential to me, therefore, that each and every one of us plant all available space in products for our tables. Your children can not perform a more loyal or greater service to our country than by using their spare time in cultivating tracts of ground. The soldiers and sailors must be supplied with the best of food. Our president, our governor and our mayor have called upon us to do this patriotic duty. I feel confident that the Pennsylvania men will do their part. Will you do it, men?

"Now that war is declared and there has been so much said about "slackers" and men becoming benedicts to keep from serving their country, I feel duty bound to give you my views as they apply to our own employes. I ask that you carefully consider the very great importance of the railroads as arteries of commerce. At the time war was declared in Europe, no particular attention was given the railroads by some of the warring nations, and, as a result, great confusion existed until the governments stepped in, took charge, and manned the railroads with soldiers. We can not afford to make this mistake. The great battles of the present war have been fought to gain control of important railroads or terminals.

"The president has issued a call for the building of 3,000 ships to break the submarine blockade, and to build these ships the railroads must play an important part in transporting the necessary material. Our railroad is now short of motive power and cars. I feel, therefore, that it is your patriotic duty to remain at your machines and at your benches. Railroads are as necessary for the defense of our country as battleships and armies, and it is essentially necessary that the railroads be fully manned for doing their part.

"The government realizes the value of railroads and how necessary it is to keep them open, as they have placed soldiers at every bridge and every tunnel of any importance on every railroad in the United States. We have nineteen soldiers guarding two Western Division bridges, at the present time.

"Loyalty, men, means devoted allegiance to your government. The government must have the fullest use of the railroads. Therefore, your patriotic duty is to serve this railroad to the best of your ability. This applies not only to those who may feel it their duty to enlist, but those also who may be able to make more money, temporarily, at some other business or in some other shop. No person will call you a "slacker" for failure to enlist if you do your part by helping to provide our government with the necessary means of transporting our armies and food and supplies."

G. E. HOME GUARDS.

Company With Fifty Men to Be Organized.

The employes at the General Electric works have started the organization of a company of home guards, which will have a membership of fifty or more men. The organization project has been brewing for some time, but took no definite form until Thursday night, when some of the leaders met and decided to form a company and Friday night it was further advanced by electing R. O. Orff chairman and J. H. Breidenstein secretary. Later the organization was effected by electing Lieutenant W. Howard Miller captain and declaring that the organization will be permanent. Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock a committee appointed to draft a constitution will meet in the firemen's assembly room at the works for that purpose. This committee consists of R. O. Orff, chairman; J. H. Briedenstein, Earl Watterman, Robert Bartel and J. R. Bird. They will submit the result of their efforts to the company for approval Monday night. While the members of this company are all employes of the General Electric works, they will be subject to the state and government laws bearing on that subject. The original idea was a membership of fifty, but the indications are that the limit will be extended and it may reach one hundred before many weeks. There are many men anxious to join it.

PROGRAM FOR SHOP MEETING.

The Blacksmith Male quartet will have entire charge of the program for the noon-day meeting next Tuesday at the Pennsylvania main shop. Scheffer, will fire a salute when the flag reaches its position on the staff and is unfolded. The musical part of the exercises will be taken care of by shop quartet. H. U. FLAG DEMONSTRATION.

Patriotic N. P. Officials and Employes Hoist the Colors.

The unfurling of the American flag on the handsome pole erected between the Nickel Plate office building and passenger station at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon was a most pretty and patriotic scene. Miss Marie Emrich, stenographer for Superintendent W. F. Watterson, raised and liberated the flag, midst the cheers of a large number of the employes and the screeching of whistles of the yard engines brought there for that purpose. Speeches were made by Judge Walter Olds and Captain E. H. Kilbourne. A military salute was given by the battery.

BRAKEMAN HOBSON LOSES AN ARM

Fort Wayne Man Run Down by String of Cars in Bellevue Yards.

E. B. Hobson, the Nickel Plate brakeman, who was so badly injured at Bellevue at 4:30 o'clock Friday afternoon, has a chance for recovery, according to news from his bedside today. The attending surgeon announces that the injured man will lose an arm, but the mangled leg will be saved unless some unexpected complications arise. Mr. Hobson is in the Bellevue hospital, where the amputation of the arm will be made.

Brakeman Hobson was a member of Conductor Charles Compton's crew and left here Friday morning on an eastbound through freight train, arriving in the Bellevue yards at 4:30 o'clock Friday afternoon. As he stepped from the caboose, he walked upon an adjoining track immediately in front of a string of cars that were being pushed by a switch engine and was knocked down. The cars were moving slowly and only one pair of wheels passed over Mr. Hobson and he escaped death. One arm was so badly mangled, however, that amputation was necessary, and one of his legs was also crushed and at first it was feared that, too, would have to be amputated. Later developments led the surgeon to believe the leg could be saved and an effort in that direction is being made. There are also some internal injuries, but they are not of a dangerous character, the attending surgeon says.

Mr. Hobson is about thirty-five years old and has a son aged six years, who resides with his sister near the Indiana School for Feeble Minded. When in Fort Wayne Brakeman Hobson rooms at the home of Conductor N. S. Patton, 1324 West Main street. He is a brother to Willam A. Hobson, treasurer of the Fort Wayne Oil and Supply company, who went to Bellevue last night to see him. A sister also resides in the country, just north of the city, and the little son of the injured man lives with her. Mr. Hobson has worked on the Nickel Plate for six or seven years, with the exception of a few months when he was employed on the Baltimore and Ohio, with headquarters at Garrett. He returned to this city last October and has been employed as a brakeman on the UNicked Plate ever since. He is a member of Fort Wayne lodge, No. 136, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

W. C. Leininger and J. W. Richards Victims of Runaway Car Accident.

W. O. Leininger, of Bellevue, and John W. Richards, of Fostoria, Nickel Plate employes, were so badly injured at Narlo, Ohio, near Maple Grove, that they died soon after the accident, which was due to a car breaking away from an engine and dashing down the incline to the stone quarry, running through a switch and crashing into another car, at 1:30 o'clock Friday afternoon. Leininger, who was a brakeman on the stone quarry train with Conductor E. W. Horton, was riding the car as it was being moved by the engine. When it broke loose and started down the incline track at a frightful speed he made an effort to stop it, but failed, and when he ran on to another track and struck a car he was thrown off in such manner that the wheels ran over him, inflicting injuries which proved fatal a few minutes afterwards. Mr. Richards was a car repairman and resided in Fostoria. He was under the car struck by the runaway and the wheels passed over him, causing injuries from which he died while being taken to Fostoria on a special train. Both cars in the collision were demolished and the victims were buried beneath the debris, causing delay in getting aid to them. Both men were middle-aged and had been employed on the Nickel Plate a number of years. Each had a family. Narlo is a station thirty miles west of Bellevue, from which immense quantities of stone are shipped, there being big quarries there. The train on which Leininger was a brakeman was known as the "stone quarry" train because its work was to handle the products of the quarry alone, delivering stone to connecting lines at Bellevue and elsewhere.

Pawnbroker Pays Fine on Charge of Lending Money Illegally.

Three times in a row, Judge Kerr pronounced Ben Michaelson, pawn broker and second hand dealer, guilty of law violation, Saturday morning. Michaelson was fined $10 for the first offense and given indefinite continuance on the other two complaints, brought against him.

Joseph Gosser, of Defiance, Ohio, testified that Michaelson had loaned him $1 on security of Gosser's suitcase. Gosser paid $2 to get the suitcase back a few days later and found that a part of his belongings were gone, he told.

Michaelson does not have a license to lend money. He was found guilty of violating the petty lender law and fined. Later he was convicted of failing to report articles which he had purchased from men who left goods with him. He was also found guilty of buying goods from intoxicated men.

Flag in Court.

Police court was brightened by a new flag, seven feet long, which was draped along the wall above the desk of Judge Kerr and out over the witness stand. The judge had purchased the flag because he said he believed the people in police court needed its soothing influence as well as folks who are not accused of misdemeanors. Representatives of nearly every nation climbed to the witness stand and under the folds of the ensign of universal freedom told their stories of mistakes and failures.

First Straw Hat.

The first straw hat, which has been noted in company with men folks this year, was removed by John Christlieb, Nebraska resident, who slipped into the basement room to hear the crime stories. He held a light panama hat carefully in his hands as he listened to his brothers' woes. Christlieb also wore an overcoat.

Pappert Gets Two.

Detective Sergeant William F. Pappert captured two men who are wanted in other cities, Friday afternoon. He secured Charles Murray, hotel keeper, who was sent to the state farm last summer for operating a blind tiger at Lake Wawasee, and who is wanted in Warsaw for breaking his parole from that institution. Murray was working here and staying on Washington street. Elon A. Smith, of Rochester, was the other victim of Pappert's search. He was taken from a house at 1615 California avenue. It is claimed that he is charged with passing worthless checks in Rochester. He will have a hearing before Judge Kerr at 5 o'clock Saturday evening, at which time Rochester officers are expected to come for him.

Nellie Apprehended.

After two days' futile search, Nellie Ellet alias Nellie Dale, was taken by Officer Welch Friday afternoon. She was staying on a farm near Fort Wayne. The woman is wanted in Toledo upon a charge of stealing a valuable coat from a department store there, police have been notified. She is held under $500 bond for hearing on Monday, but is expected to be released to Toledo authorities before that time.

Wasn't Him.

John (Never-sweat) Lee, leader of the banana bearers' strike last summer and a well known police character, denied the charge of removing store boxes from the rear of a Columbia street shoe store. He blamed a friend named "Bill" Hicks, who he said sometimes used John's pushcart. Lee was fined $1 and costs.

William McCullum, charged with removing copper wire from the basement of the Woolworth Ten Cent store, was released by Judge Kerr because McCullum has a family. The man must make regular reports to the judge as to his conduct.

Other Police Court Cases.

Two cases of public intoxication were continued until Monday. The defendants were Henry Lambert and R. P. Cleckner.

Bessie Cook, charged with disorderly conduct along with George Anderson, will be tried next Tuesday. Anderson was fined at the time when the charge was first brought two weeks ago.

John Weber will be tried Tuesday morning on a child neglect charge.

TWO ROOF FIRES.

Two roof fires, started by sparks from the chimney, called out firemen twice Saturday morning. The alarms were from the homes of Frank Larent, 1404 Syp Run avenue, and M. K. Countryman, 2318 Harrison street. In both cases the loss is set at $10.

Mr. and Mrs. John Wessel, sr., came home today from a trip to Florida.

Fort Wayne will tolerate no slacking in the "grow a garden" campaign which is now open. Mayor Hosey expects to make that clear to real estate men, especially, he says, and may call a meeting of the Real Estate exchange soon to explain that vacant lots must be planted or action may be taken through the attorney general.

The mayor says he has learned that in war time the city has a right to make the best possible use of all its property in aiding the country. He thinks the council can order the use of vacant lots for food planting in this moment of stress. Mayor Hosey will explain his attitude to real estate men if he calls a meeting next week.

Mayor Hosey has been told by heads of the various city schools that classes in gardening will be formed among children in order to insure the cultivating of all lots. The city council may be asked by the mayor to appropriate money for securing seeds for the school planting and for people who are too poor to buy their own.

"This movement is the best thing that ever happened to Fort Wayne," said Mayor Hosey Saturday. "It makes use of all our ground. It will stop the weed nuisance. A lot for sale will look as good to a sensible person if it is filled with waving corn, as if it stood chin-high in weeds."

SEVEN CASES.

Six of Smallpox Received on Friday.

Six cases of smallpox, five in the same home, were received by the board of public health on Friday. The five cases were in the Robinson home, 320 Dalman street. Victims are Zula Robinson, the mother, 34; Nendle, aged 12; Geraldine, 8; Clarence, 6, and Margaret, 2.

AULT WILL SERVE.

John Ault, auditor of the city light plant, will act as secretary-treasurer of the institution in absence of John Wessel, jr., who joined the regular army on Friday. Wessel will serve in the army during duration of the war. That is the hectic question of time. Wessel is not expecting it to be a ninety day campaign.

Three large electric lighted signs are to be reared for the city lighting department soon, members of the board of works decided Saturday morning. The glowing displays will be in the most prominent parts of town and will tell why all should "do it electrically."

Will Repair Bridge.

Do you want a clear skin?

If your skin is not fresh, smooth and glowing, or has suffered from an unwise use of cosmetics, here is an easy, inexpensive way to clear it: Spread on a little Resinol Ointment, letting it remain for ten minutes. Then wash off with Resinol Soap and hot water. Finish with a dash of clear, cold water to close the pores. Do this regularly, once a day, and see if it does not quickly soothe and cleanse the pores, lessen the tendency to pimples, and leave the complexion clear, fresh and velvety. Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment are sold by all druggists.

VAST RESOURCES OF NATION FOR BATTLE

Munitions Concerns Show Mighty Capacity for Making Shells.

Washington, April 14.—The navy department made public today bids received from twenty-five munitions makers on an order for 1,578,000 shells of all calibres, the figures bringing out sharply the enormous capacity of American plants. Eleven bidders each offered to absorb the entire order for 1,170,000 one-pounder projectiles and within a few weeks to begin deliveries at the rate of from 100,000 to 500,000 shells a month. There were six separate proposals covering the entire order for 3,000 14-inch shells. The bids show also a capacity to produce 30,000 six-inch shells, 2,500 14-inch and about the same number of 12-inch shells a month after the machinery is set in motion. The Bridgeport projectile company bid on all classes of shells up to 6-inch and showed a monthly output of 1,200 of the largest type and 100,000 one-pounder shells within a short time.

The Baldwin Locomotive works could begin delivery of 14-inch shells within one hundred days and turn out 500 a month thereafter. The Bethlehem Steel company could deliver 750 big shells a month, beginning within a year and within ten days could deliver five-inch, four-inch and three-inch shells at a rate of 10,000 a month. The Washington Steel and Ordnance company is prepared to deliver 100 14-inch and 100 12-inch shells within six weeks and turn out one-pounder projectiles at a rate of from 3,000 to 5,000 a day thereafter.

The moment is grave for Spain which no longer can abstract herself from the reverberations of the events transpiring around her."

GERMAN REVERSE GETS ON NERVES OF THE PEOPLE

Amsterdam, April 14.—The military critic of the Vossische Zeitung of Berlin writes that he has received many letters which prove that "the nerves of many readers are beginning to give way." He dwells on the "unfounded" excitement which he states is spreading among those at home and warns the public not to judge the situation from single events, but to take events as a whole into consideration.

Head of German Alliance Says He is for America Against Germany.

Cleveland, O., April 14.—That German-Americans will not join in the intensive farming movement on the ground that it would help Great Britain and her allies, was the assertion of Herman Fellinger, a member of Mayor Davis' war board, here today. "All German-Americans, while they are backing America as against Germany, are praying for the defeat of Great Britain and her allies," said Fellinger. "It is too much to expect from them to raise foodstuffs for her allies."

Following a statement by Myron T. Herrick, chairman of the board, in attempting to restore order, that Fellinger's attitude was misunderstood and that Fellinger and all other German-Americans were loyal, Fellinger maintained that this was true, but that he could not do otherwise than hope for the defeat of the allies.

Fellinger is president of the German-American alliance.

PENNSY EMPLOYES SHOW PATRIOTISM

If there were any suspicions of disloyalty to country among the Pennsylvania employes in the minds of any, they were surely dispelled by the patriotic demonstrations at the big shop at noon Saturday and again at 4:30 o'clock at the round house, when dedicatory exercises for a number of flags that had been erected in the past week were held. Each was attended by thousands of people, the greater portion being the employes of the company and members of their families.

The greatest of the demonstrations, of course, was on Holman street, where nine flags were dedicated as follows: The master mechanic's office building, the superintendent's building, the machine shop, the erecting shop, the boiler shop, the tin and pipe shop, the blacksmith shop, the planing mills and the power plant.

The first feature of the day, which was not on the program, was the assembling at the Pennsylvania passenger station on Baker street of the fifty of sixty men employed in the night gang at the erecting and machine shops, and lead by the First regiment drum corps, marched to Clinton street and through the shops, each man carrying an American flag. This demonstration was made ten minutes before the hour appointed for the closing of the shop and it created such enthusiasm among the shopmen that they were evidently incapable of further work and orders were given to blow the whistle.

At this moment, the Elks' band, which had just arrived on the scene, started up a patriotic air and the shopmen, each in his working clothes and face and hands begrimmed with dirt, came pouring out of the Barr street entrance and lined up in front of the speakers' stand, where they remained throughout the exercises interesting and enthusiastic listeners to the speeches.

Before the speaking began, Battery B and Company E arrived on the scene and formed on the vacant lot opposite the stand, while hundreds of ladies, gentlemen and children lined up on the sidewalk and street, making a solid mass of humanity extending over a distance of 300 or 400 feet. Handsome programs, bearing on the title page, a colored picture of the American flag and on the inner pages the songs "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America," were passed out among the audience and will be preserved as souvenirs of the patriotic demonstration. The program was as follows:

Selections—Elks' band.
Song, "America"—Assemblage.
Remarks by chairman—W. H. Moeller.
Introductory remarks—Master Mechanic E. E. Griest.
Address—Rev. A. J. Folsom.
Song, "Star Spangled Banner"—Blacksmiths' quartette.
Call to colors—Bugler Co. E.
Hoisting of colors—Capt. Ray McAdams, Co. E.
"Star Spangled Banner"—Elks' band.
President's salute, twenty-one guns—Battery B., Capt. J. C. Sheffer.

Following the exercises, the shopmen, lead by the band and Company E, marched around the block on which the main part of the plant is located, saluting and cheering as they passed each flag.

The committemen to whom much of the credit for the excellent patriotic demonstration is due W. H. Moeller, A. J. Johnson, P. E. Bresnahan, J. H. Deck, F. S. Dovolt, O. J. Farnan, E. E. Griest, J. H. Hobrock, J. P. Labbe and C. Miller.

E. E. Griest's Speech.

Mr. Griest in his interductory remarks, emphasized the importance of the railways and all their departments, including the shops, to the government in case of war. He said:

"Ladies and Gentlemen: I am delighted to see this great gathering of patriotic citizens. One can not doubt the loyalty of the employes of the Pennsylvania, or how they stand on the very important matter that is giving all of us grave concern.

"You have probably already noticed that I am not accustomed to public speaking, and it is not my intention to compete with such worthy orators as we have with us today. I only wish that I had the power of oratory possessed by these gentlemen who are to follow, as I have two matters of great moment that I would like to drive home.

"From reports issued by the government, I have been convinced that there is, right now, a food shortage in this country, and this fact is further brought out by the prices we are paying for the necessities of life. It is difficult to estimate the value to our country of any service that will add to the food supply. Large numbers of our good young men from the farms are enlisting, and, thus, instead of being producers of life's necessities, they are becoming consumers. This will further add to the food shortage. It seems essential to me, therefore, that each and every one of us plant all available space in products for our tables. Your children can not perform a more loyal or greater service to our country than by using their spare time in cultivating tracts of ground. The soldiers and sailors must be supplied with the best of food. Our president, our governor and our mayor have called upon us to do this patriotic duty. I feel confident that the Pennsylvania men will do their part. Will you do it, men?

"Now that war is declared and there has been so much said about 'slackers' and men becoming beneficts to keep from serving their country, I feel duty bound to give you my views as they apply to our own employes. I ask that you carefully consider the very great importance of the railroads as arteries of commerce. At the time war was declared in Europe, no particular attention was given the railroads by some of the warring nations, and, as a result, great confusion existed until the governments stepped in, took charge, and manned the railroads with soldiers. We can not afford to make this mistake. The great battles of the present war have been fought to gain control of important railroads or terminals.

"The president has issued a call for the building of 3,000 ships to break the submarine blockade, and to build these ships the railroads must play an important part in transporting the necessary material. Our railroad is now short of motive power and cars. I feel, therefore, that it is your patriotic duty to remain at your machines and at your benches. Railroads are as necessary for the defense of our country as battleships and armies, and it is essentially necessary that the railroads be fully manned for doing their part.

"The government realizes the value of railroads and how necessary it is to keep them open, as they have placed soldiers at every bridge and every tunnel of any importance on every railroad in the United States. We have nineteen soldiers guarding two Western Division bridges, at the present time.

"Loyalty, men, means devoted allegiance to your government. The government must have the fullest use of the railroads. Therefore, your patriotic duty is to serve this railroad to the best of your ability. This applies not only to those who may feel it their duty to enlist, but those also who may be able to make more money, temporarily, at some other business or in some other shop. No person will call you a "slacker" for failure to enlist if you do your part by helping to provide our government with the necessary means of transporting our armies and food and supplies."

G. E. HOME GUARDS.

Company With Fifty Men to Be Organized.

The employes at the General Electric works have started the organization of a company of home guards, which will have a membership of fifty or more men. The organization project has been brewing for some time, but took no definite form until Thursday night, when some of the leaders met and decided to form a company and Friday night it was further advanced by electing R. O. Orff chairman and J. H. Breidenstein secretary. Later the organization was effected by electing Lieutenant W. Howard Miller captain and declaring that the organization will be permanent. Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock a committee appointed to draft a constitution will meet in the firemen's assembly room at the works for that purpose. This committee consists of R. O. Orff, chairman; J. H. Briedenstein, Earl Watterman, Robert Bartel and J. R. Bird. They will submit the result of their efforts to the company for approval Monday night. While the members of this company are all employes of the General Electric works, they will be subject to the state and government laws bearing on that subject. The original idea was a membership of fifty, but the indications are that the limit will be extended and it may reach one hundred before many weeks. There are many men anxious to join it.

PROGRAM FOR SHOP MEETING.

The Blacksmith Male quartet will have entire charge of the program for the noon-day meeting next Tuesday at the Pennsylvania main shop. The program will be entirely musical, furnished by the quartet, composed of Messrs. J. C. Traxler, first tenor; F. H. Gaylord, second tenor; C. B. Watterson, first bass, and S. E. M. C. A.

FLAG AT EAST SHOPS.

Attorneys Harry Hilgeman and Maurice Niezer will be the chief speakers at the flag dedication at the east car shops of the Pennsylvania next Tuesday. A handsome pole has been erected just west of the yard office, on Anthony boulevard, from which the flag is to be unfurled to the breezes by the employes at the shop. Battery B, Captain J. C. Scheffer, will fire a salute when the flag reaches its position on the staff and is unfolded. The musical part of the exercises will be taken care of by shop quartet. H. U. Diem, the general foreman of the car department, will introduce the speakers. The employes at the shop are loyal both to the United States government and to the company for whom they work.

ERECT FINE FLAG POLE.

One of the neatest flag poles in the city has been erected on the vacant ground on Fairfield avenue, just north of the Wabash master mechanic's office, and as soon as a flag which has been ordered arrives, it will be hoisted on the pole with appropriate ceremonies. This pole, which is constructed of steel pipe and is eight feet high, was erected by the employes and paid for by contributions made by them, all of the men being contributors.

HOISTING ENGINEERS TO ORGANIZE.

W. G. Anthony, organizer for the hoisting engineers, who has been engaged in organizing a union in the city for several days, will complete the organization at a meeting at the corner of Barr and Columbia streets tonight at 8 o'clock. The new union will be affiliated with the Fort Wayne Building Trade council. Mr. Anthony resides in Indianapolis.

FLAG DEMONSTRATION.

Patriotic N. P. Officials and Employes Hoist the Colors.

The unfurling of the American flag on the handsome pole erected between the Nickel Plate office building and passenger station at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon was a most pretty and patriotic scene. Miss Marie Emrich, stenographer for Superintendent W. F. Watterson, raised and liberated the flag, midst the cheers of a large number of the employes and the screeching of whistles of the yard engines brought there for that purpose. Speeches were made by Judge Walter Olds and Captain E. H. Kilbourne. A military salute was given by the battery.

CHOP SUEY FEAST.

Fort Wayne lodge, No. 136, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, will have an innovation in the way of a feast at the close of the meeting at Unity hall tomorrow. BRAKEMAN HOBSON LOSES AN ARM

Fort Wayne Man Run Down by String of Cars in Bellevue Yards.

E. B. Hobson, the Nickel Plate brakeman, who was so badly injured at Bellevue at 4:30 o'clock Friday afternoon, has a chance for recovery, according to news from his bedside today. The attending surgeon announces that the injured man will lose an arm, but the mangled leg will be saved unless some unexpected complications arise. Mr. Hobson is in the Bellevue hospital, where the amputation of the arm will be made.

Brakeman Hobson was a member of Conductor Charles Compton's crew and left here Friday morning on an eastbound through freight train, arriving in the Bellevue yards at 4:30 o'clock Friday afternoon. As he stepped from the caboose, he walked upon an adjoining track immediately in front of a string of cars that were being pushed by a switch engine and was knocked down. The cars were moving slowly and only one pair of wheels passed over Mr. Hobson and he escaped death. One arm was so badly mangled, however, that amputation was necessary, and one of his legs was also crushed and at first it was feared that, too, would have to be amputated. Later developments led the surgeon to believe the leg could be saved and an effort in that direction is being made. There are also some internal injuries, but they are not of a dangerous character, the attending surgeon says.

Mr. Hobson is about thirty-five years old and has a son aged six years, who resides with his sister near the Indiana School for Feeble Minded. When in Fort Wayne Brakeman Hobson rooms at the home of Conductor N. S. Patton, 1324 West Main street. He is a brother to William A. Hobson, treasurer of the Fort Wayne Oil and Supply company, who went to Bellevue last night to see him. A sister also resides in the country, just north of the city, and the little son of the injured man lives with her. Mr. Hobson has worked on the Nickel Plate for six or seven years, with the exception of a few months when he was employed on the Baltimore and Ohio, with headquarters at Garrett. He returned to this city last October and has been employed as a brakeman on the UNicked Plate ever since. He is a member of Fort Wayne lodge, No. 136, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

W. C. Leininger and J. W. Richards Victims of Runaway Car Accident.

W. O. Leininger, of Bellevue, and John W. Richards, of Fostoria, Nickel Plate employes, were so badly injured at Narlo, Ohio, near Maple Grove, that they died soon after the accident, which was due to a car breaking away from an engine and dashing down the incline to the stone quarry, running through a switch and crashing into another car, at 1:30 o'clock Friday afternoon. Leininger, who was a brakeman on the stone quarry train with Conductor E. W. Horton, was riding the car as it was being moved by the engine. When it broke loose and started down the incline track at a frightful speed he made an effort to stop it, but failed, and when he ran on to another track and struck a car he was thrown off in such manner that the wheels ran over him, inflicting injuries which proved fatal a few minutes afterwards. Mr. Richards was a car repairman and resided in Fostoria. He was under the car struck by the runaway and the wheels passed over him, causing injuries from which he died while being taken to Fostoria on a special train. Both cars in the collision were demolished and the victims were buried beneath the debris, causing delay in getting aid to them. Both men were middle-aged and had been employed on the Nickel Plate a number of years. Each had a family. Narlo is a station thirty miles west of Bellevue, from which immense quantities of stone are shipped, there being big quarries there. The train on which Leininger was a brakeman was known as the "stone quarry" train because its work was to handle the products of the quarry alone, delivering stone to connecting lines at Bellevue and elsewhere.

Pawnbroker Pays Fine on Charge of Lending Money Illegally.

Three times in a row, Judge Kerr pronounced Ben Michaelson, pawn broker and second hand dealer, guilty of law violation, Saturday morning. Michaelson was fined $10 for the first offense and given indefinite continuance on the other two complaints, brought against him.

Joseph Gosser, of Defiance, Ohio, testified that Michaelson had loaned him $1 on security of Gosser's suitcase. Gosser paid $2 to get the suitcase back a few days later and found that a part of his belongings were gone, he told.

Michaelson does not have a license to lend money. He was found guilty of violating the petty lender law and fined. Later he was convicted of failing to report articles which he had purchased from men who left goods with him. He was also found guilty of buying goods from intoxicated men.

Flag in Court.

Police court was brightened by a new flag, seven feet long, which was draped along the wall above the desk of Judge Kerr and out over the witness stand. The judge had purchased the flag because he said he believed the people in police court needed its soothing influence as well as folks who are not accused of misdemeanors. Representatives of nearly every nation climbed to the witness stand and under the folds of the ensign of universal freedom told their stories of mistakes and failures.

First Straw Hat.

The first straw hat, which has been noted in company with men folks this year, was removed by John Christlieb, Nebraska resident, who slipped into the basement room to hear the crime stories. He held a light panama hat carefully in his hands as he listened to his brothers' woes. Christlieb also wore an overcoat.

Pappert Gets Two.

Detective Sergeant William F. Pappert captured two men who are wanted in other cities, Friday afternoon. He secured Charles Murray, hotel keeper, who was sent to the state farm last summer for operating a blind tiger at Lake Wawasee, and who is wanted in Warsaw for breaking his parole from that institution. Murray was working here and staying on Washington street. Elon A. Smith, of Rochester, was the other victim of Pappert's search. He was taken from a house at 1615 California avenue. It is claimed that he is charged with passing worthless checks in Rochester. He will have a hearing before Judge Kerr at 5 o'clock Saturday evening, at which time Rochester officers are expected to come for him.

Nellie Apprehended.

After two days' futile search, Nellie Ellet alias Nellie Dale, was taken by Officer Welch Friday afternoon. She was staying on a farm near Fort Wayne. The woman is wanted in Toledo upon a charge of stealing a valuable coat from a department store there, police have been notified. She is held under $500 bond for hearing on Monday, but is expected to be released to Toledo authorities before that time.

Wasn't Him.

John (Never-sweat) Lee, leader of the banana bearers' strike last summer and a well known police character, denied the charge of removing store boxes from the rear of a Columbia street shoe store. He blamed a friend named "Bill" Hicks, who he said sometimes used John's pusheart. Lee was fined $1 and costs.

William McCullum, charged with removing copper wire from the basement of the Woolworth Ten Cent store, was released by Judge Kerr because McCullum has a family. The man must make regular reports to the judge as to his conduct.

Other Police Court Cases.

Two cases of public intoxication were continued until Monday. The defendants were Henry Lambert and R. P. Cleckner.

Bessie Cook, charged with disorderly conduct along with George Anderson, will be tried next Tuesday. Anderson was fined at the time when the charge was first brought two weeks ago.

John Weber will be tried Tuesday morning on a child neglect charge.

CLASS IN FULL.

No more girls will be admitted to the class for military drilling under Lieutenant Litsey. The limit has been reached. Seventy girls of the city have enlisted and will drill one night out of each week at the Harmar school building. The first practice will be held next Wednesday evening.

TWO ROOF FIRES.

Two roof fires, started by sparks from the chimney, called out firemen twice Saturday morning. The alarms were from the homes of Frank Larent, 1404 Syp Run avenue, and M. K. Countryman, 2318 Harrison street. In both cases the loss is set at $10.

Mr. and Mrs. John Wessel, sr., came home today from a trip to Florida.

Fort Wayne will tolerate no slacking in the "grow a garden" campaign which is now open. Mayor Hosey expects to make that clear to real estate men, especially, he says, and may call a meeting of the Real Estate exchange soon to explain that vacant lots must be planted or action may be taken through the attorney general.

The mayor says he has learned that in war time the city has a right to make the best possible use of all its property in aiding the country. He thinks the council can order the use of vacant lots for food planting in this moment of stress. Mayor Hosey will explain his attitude to real estate men if he calls a meeting next week.

Mayor Hosey has been told by heads of the various city schools that classes in gardening will be formed among children in order to insure the cultivating of all lots. The city council may be asked by the mayor to appropriate money for securing seeds for the school planting and for people who are too poor to buy their own.

"This movement is the best thing that ever happened to Fort Wayne," said Mayor Hosey Saturday. "It makes use of all our ground. It will stop the weed nuisance. A lot for sale will look as good to a sensible person if it is filled with waving corn, as if it stood chin-high in weeds."

SEVEN CASES.

Six of Smallpox Received on Friday.

AULT WILL SERVE.

John Ault, auditor of the city light plant, will act as secretary-treasurer of the institution in absence of John Wessel, jr., who joined the regular army on Friday. Wessel will serve in the army during duration of the war. That is the hectic question of time. Wessel is not expecting it to be a ninety day campaign.

Three large electric lighted signs are to be reared for the city lighting department soon, members of the board of works decided Saturday morning. The glowing displays will be in the most prominent parts of town and will tell why all should "do it electrically."

Will Repair Bridge.

DEWALD BOYS ANSWER CALL

Several Have Quit National Guard to Join the Regular Army.

Brotherly friendship and ties will not be severed in at least one family in Fort Wayne. Three sons of Mr. and Mrs. George DeWald, of East DeWald street, have joined the colors. Stephen, Edward and Jay DeWald have answered the call of their country and have enlisted in the signal corps, which is being organized in this city.

This is the first instance which has come to light where three brothers have joined the colors at the same time. All three young men are widely known and all are athletes of prominence in the city. The parents of the young men are pleased over the action of their sons.

Recruiting in all the branches of the service has not slumped in the least and Saturday was no exception. Officers are expecting a larger rush Saturday afternoon and evening.

Many Join Regulars.

Many of the boys of the national guard have severed their connections with this organization and have joined the regulars. However, all three units have nearly attained war strength.

Lieutenant Trent Stout, the examining officer, states that many of the applicants are discarded on account of weak eyes. Undersize and underweight also causes many to be rejected. The size limit is five feet four inches and the weight limit is 129 pounds. The officer also is finding many cases of affected hearts.

Takes Clerks.

Four clerks for assistance in the army recruiting station were taken Friday by Captain Thomas Ryan. The men selected from a number of applicants were Arthur A. Rodemeyer, Joe Finan, William Junk and Charles Wild. William Hadak is the stenographer who has been permanently employed. The other men will serve during the war.

Will Work Sunday.

Officers at the army recruiting station will work all day Sunday. Members of the battery will exhibit the latest army equipment at the picture shows. More literature will be distributed.

Eighty-six men were sent from Fort Wayne on Friday. Twenty-five more had signed up at noon Saturday.

The Lewis machine gun was used in connection with two flag raising ceremonies and will be employed at the LaSalle street flag raising on Sunday afternoon.

Heaps of Talk.

Several large rolls of posters to be used for "talking for the navy," were delivered to the naval recruiting station Saturday morning. The red, white and blue cards will be put up all over the city Sunday. Three men joined the navy on Saturday.

RECEIVER IS NAMED FOR ROYAL ARCANUM

Boston, April 14.—Thomas J. Boynton, formerly attorney general of Massachusetts, was appointed receiver of the supreme council of the Royal Arcanum by Federal Judge Aldrich today on petition of Arthur L. Hobart, of Braintree, a member of the order, who holds a death benefit certificate calling for $500. Hobart alleged that the reserve fund of the organization amounting to $3,800,000 had been illegally administered and that it would be entirely depleted within two years unless the court interfered. He asked that an injunction be issued restraining the officers from further administrating the funds and that the receiver wind up the affairs of the council.

OFFERS BILL TO PLACE FIGHTERS AT OTHER WORK

Washington, D. C., April 14.—A bill to direct the secretary of war "to enlist or transfer from present enlistment for farm, commercial and manufacturing work within the United States an army of 200,000 men between 18 and 60 years old for a two year term of service unless sooner discharged," was introduced today by Representative Scott of Michigan. Their compensation under the bill would be the same as now paid privates in the regular army.

Everything Ready for Opening of the Eighth Indiana Pin Meet.

Among the bowlers who meet here this evening for the opening of the eighth Indiana tournament to be held at the Metropolitan alleys, is George Mullen, former Detroit Tiger hurler. Mullen comes with the Kokomo delegation and will roll in the five-man, doubles and single events.

Another member of the Kokomo delegation is G. S. Garrett, of Peru, who in the last national tourney at Grand Rapids broke the world's record for three-game total, stacking up a count of 721 pins. The record score was made in doubles competition.

All Ready for Opening.

Everything is set for the opening of the meet. At 8 o'clock the first squad of six teams will roll, five of them being from Gary and the other from Hammond. The bowling will be done on six alleys, and six prominent Fort Wayne men have been chosen to shoot the balls down the lanes in the initial matches. They are Mayor W. J. Hosey, Maurice Niezer, Sherman Cutshall, Lew G. Ellingham, E. C. Miller and Charles Biederwolf.

At 10 o'clock the second squad of six teams are slated to perform. Of these five-man outfits, four are from Kokomo and two from Michigan City. The work begins again at 7 o'clock Sunday morning and keeps going until midnight, with no intermission. If everything goes well the finish will occur about 3 o'clock in the afternoon of Sunday, May 6.

No Admission Fee.

A rumor has been wending its way around the city that an admittance fee would be charged those who wished to witness the tourney bowling. This is all wrong and Secretary George Stang wishes to have it corrected. At all times during the meet the doors will be open to everybody who wants to see the pins fly.

The schedule and names of teams and captains for the opening nigh tis as follows:

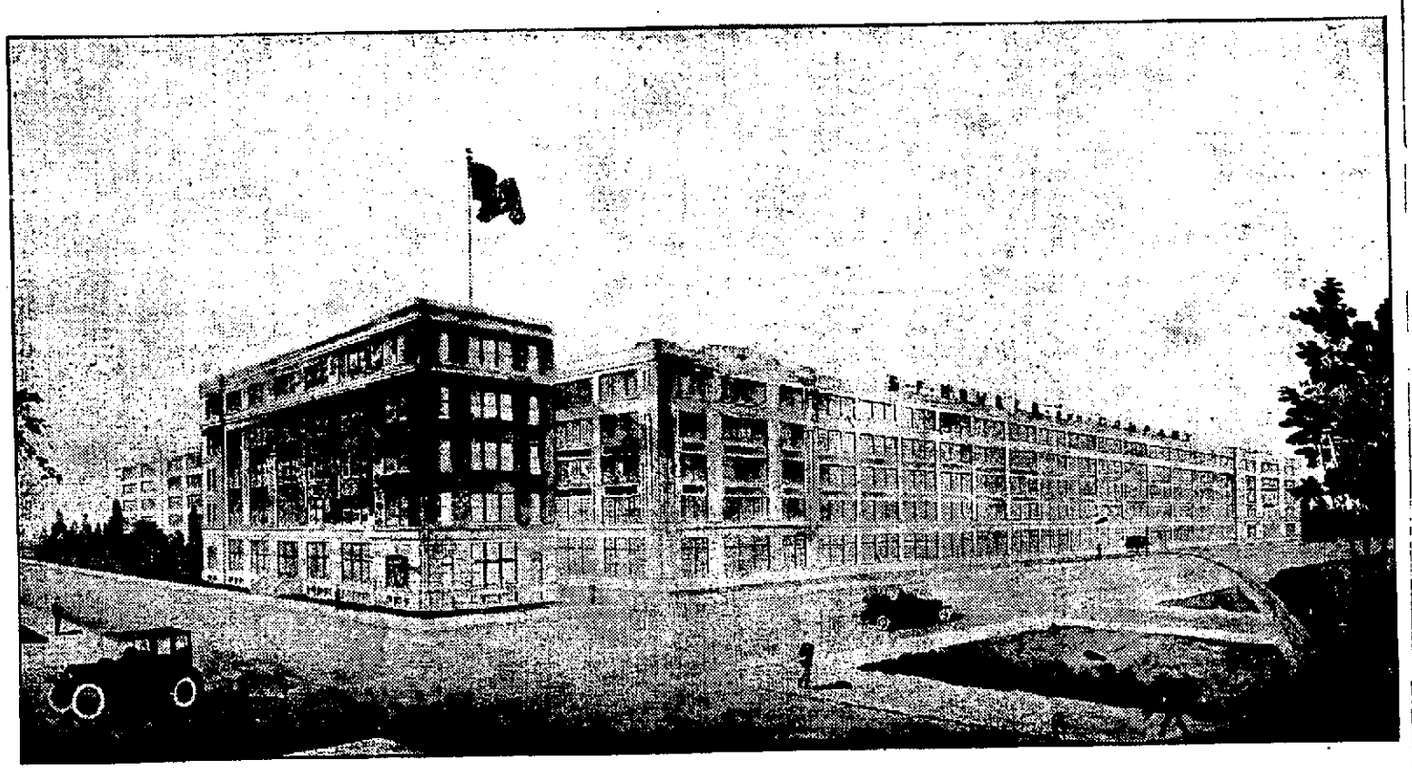
DRAWING OF MAGNIFICENT NEW OFFICE BUILDING TO BE ERECTED BY S. F. BOWER.



The above is the architect's drawing of the magnificent new $350,000 office building to be erected by S. F. Bowser & Co. and for which the contract has already been let. The structure will be six stories high and basement, or 100 feet above the sidewalk, 150 feet long and 50 feet wide, with an addition in the rear 55 feet long and 30 feet wide. It will be one of the best equipped office buildings in the middle west and will have every modern convenience. The basement will be nine and a half feet high, the second floor fourteen and a half feet; the second, third, fourth and fifth floors twelve feet and the sixth floor sixteen feet. The sixth floor will be used as an assembly room and in which all the various meetings in connection with the plant will be held. Two rapid elevators are to be installed.

The first eight feet of the building will be of stone and the remalander of brick, the same as is in the new Harmar school. A change has been made from what is indicated in the above picture. The building will stand in the middle of the square with beautiful parks on the east and west sides.

The ventilating system will cost approximately $50,000 by which the building will be ventilated properly without the raising of a window. In the extremely warm weather the interior will be from ten to twelve degrees cooler than on the outside, the air being washed, as Mr. Bowser explained it, every ten minutes.

The concrete foundation on which the building will rest is now in and the structure will be pushed to completion as rapidly as possible.

Wonders if Her Husband Was Really Killed Two Years Ago.

Mrs. Edith Davis, 1605 Cass street, heard two years ago that her husband was killed in a railroad wreck on April 15, 1915. She did not think much about it at the time, she says. Her husband had made short trips away from home before that and left her to care for the five little children. She just thought that his being killed might be a mistake, she said.

But her curiosity has gotten the best of her. Now she really wants to know if that was her husband who was crushed in the Warsaw wreck. She has written to the Warsaw city health officer, Dr. S. A. Shoemaker, asking him if there is any proof that the man killed in the catastrophe was Mr. Davis.

"No, it will not make any particular difference as to my future," sighed the woman, who wonders if she is a widow. "I am used to keeping the children now, but I would just like to know."

PURDUE BOYS WANT TO SERVE IN AERO CORPS

Lafayette, Ind., April 14.—Forty students at Purdue university have signified their willingness to serve in an aero corps in the war with Germany. A letter has been written to the officers of the United States army setting forth the offer of services and asking for information regarding equipment and possible training stations. An effort will be made to get more students to sign an agreement to join.

The Purdue cadet corps will work on combat problems which will require one-half day each to complete on Wednesday and Saturday.

The maneuvers will be in the country near Lafayette. It has been announced that commissions as first lieutenants in the United States army reserve corps have been granted to Prof. Sayre, of the horticultural department; W. H. E. Holmes, cadet-colonel of the cadet corps, and A. G. Philips, of the poultry department.

FRENCH BLUEJACKETS CHEERED.

Washington, April 14.—French bluejackets in uniform attracted much attention today in the streets of Washington. Groups of them walking around town were cheered by pedestrians. Some had pinned little American flags on the fronts of their blouses while others carried flags removed from automobiles and presented by their owners.

S. P. Hirsch, of the sales department of the General Electric works, is in New York on business for the company.

D. M. C. CLUB ADDS THREE DOLLARS MORE

The D. M. C. club has contributed three dollars to the New Albany relief fund being raised through The Sentinel. The fund now totals $43.

Great Plans Are Made for Celebration of Battle of Lexington.

Freedom's shout will be echoed in the blowing of every whistle and ringing of every bell in the city Thursday afternoon, April 19. When the new flag is raised on the large pole in the lot near the traction company building a field piece will sound the first deep-throated call for a general salute from all over Fort Wayne.

Factories over the city will close in honor of the day, which commemorates the battle of Lexington. Schools will be dismissed. Stores are expected to close at noon.

Line of march for the gigantic parade, which will start at 1 o'clock and which will embody every organization in the city, will be from the Pennsylvania railroad down Calhoun street to the transfer corner and west on Main street to the traction station. At the county court house a reviewing stand will be erected on which will be seated the soldiers of '61 to '65. Dr. George Jaynes, of Wabash, will deliver the principal address at the flag-raising ceremony at 2 o'clock.

Mayor Hosey will also make a speech. School children will enact patriotic scenes. Several bands will play while the assemble dthong sings "The Star-Spangled Banner" and bedlam of greetings breaks forth from every factory and church.

The program will continue through the evening. There will be several speeches delivered from the platform at the court house.

In the morning parade all participants will be on foot. No automobiles will be allowed in the line of march. Street cars will not run during the time of the parade.

A call for organization is sounded to all orders of the city by the committee representing the temporary organization of the Council for Military and Naval Affairs composed of E. A. Crane, Frank M. Hogan and C. R. Dane. Members of the committee met Saturday afternoon in the Commercial club and drew up an invitation to all organizations of the city to partake in the final forming of the war council.

LINCOLN LIFE CLUB HAS START ON SKED

Several games have been added to the schedule of the Lincoln Life club by Manager Mart Cleary. A contract was closed Friday with owner L. B. Dupee, of the Colored Giants, for a game to be played at League park, Sunday, May 6. The Giants have added several high-class performers since last year and will present a strong lineup when the season starts. Among the new players are West of the St. Louis Giants and Lawson, formerly with a fast team in Dallas, Texas.

Among the other games signed for the Insurance men are those with Marion and Kendallville. The club will go to Marion Sunday, May 27, and to Kendallville, May 13. The Reds of the latter city will appear here Decoration day.

The new uniforms for the club arrived Friday and will be distributed to the players next week. Everyone signed with the club is set for the game with Vandy's outfit April 22, and they expect to make the Central leaguers step considerably.

WILL NOW RECEIVE $5,000 ANNUALLY

Twenty-Nine Lawyers and Two Newspaper Men Were Petitioners.

Salaries of Judge John W. Eggeman of the Allen circuit court and Judge Carl Yaple of the superior court, have now been increased to $5,000 a year. This comes about by the granting of a petition by the board of county commissioners.

Twenty-nine lawyers of Fort Wayne and two newspaper men were the petitioners asking that the salary be increased by $500. The petition sets forth that the present salary of $3,500 from the state and $1,000 from the county, "is not an adequate compensation for the services of the judges." The High Cost of Living is also set forth in the petition as another reason why the salary should be increased.

This petition was granted under the provision of a new law which was passed by the last state legislature.

It is believed that this new ruling will go into effect immediatoly.

BOLIVIA HAS BROKEN OFF WITH GERMANY

Reading in the newspapers that the Red Cross society intended to substitute a child for a dummy for demonstration purposes for the home care of the sick classes, little Frank Pennoyer, 413 West Creighton avenue, a boy scout, offered his services and agreed to get two other boy scouts. A dummy would cost the chapter over $100. One little chap visited the Red Cross headquarters Saturday morning and said he wanted to offer his services to his country and was willing to do anything they told him.

Members of the supply class who have been work very strenuously and earnestly this week under the direction of Miss Johnson, expert Red Cross nurse from Chicago, will complete their work Saturday, and next week will assist Miss Johnson in teaching another class. WORK FOR LARGER CROPS CONTINUE

Many Farmers Consult the County Agent for Ideas of Better Farming.

Efforts on the part of the county agent to supply the necessary information for better and larger crops continues. He is doing everything in his power to help the farmers solve the problem of understanding their lands. Many farmers were in the city Saturday consulting him on various questions.

The time has arrived when preparations are being made for the planting of potatoes. Each year the potato scab has ruined many crops. The county agent herewith presents a remedy for this disease: Soak seed potatoes before cutting, at least two hours in a solution of one pint of formaldehyde to twenty-five gallons of water. Plant on land free from scab. Do not fertilize with manure from animals fed on scabby potatoes.

The same solution may be used for several treatments allowing potatoes to soak about thirty minutes longer for each consecutive lot.

Formaldehyde is not corrosive and the solution may safely be used in any kind of a vessel.

The county agent also states that care should be taken in safeguarding against smut in the oats. He asks that farmers consult him in this matter.

FREE BOOK FOR GARDENERS PUBLISHED BY GOVERNMENT

Washington, April 14.—As a stimulus to the appeal for more intensive gardening to feed the country during the war the department of agriculture has prepared for free distribution of a complete manual for the guidance of gardeners. Thousands of copies have been printed and as many more as the demand requires will be turned out later. The department will mail a copy to any person requesting it. The booklet contains detailed instructions, founded upon the best scientific and practical knowledge and states comprehensively so as to be of value to novices in particular. The principles of garden plotting, choice of crops, preparation of soil, cultivation and irrigation are discussed in successive sections and there are many illustrations showing the proper tools and their use and tables showing depths of planting and similar details. In a foreword the department points the comparative simplicity of gardening methods and outlines the essentials as follows:

"By the exercise of care and forethought in planning succession crops and rotations and by the utilization of every foot of available space it is possible to grow considerable quantities of vegetables on limited areas and so supplement the family food supply. The principal factors in accomplishing this are the use of seed boxes and hotbeds to give plants an early start in spring before seeds may be planted outdoors, the use of outside beds to carry plants for main season crops while early crops are occupying the garden space, and the planting of later succession crops as soon as earlier plants have been removed.

"In order that gardening may be carried on successfully in such an intensive way, it is especially important that the soil of good texture be available and that it be well supplied with humus and plantfood. It is essential, also as in all gardening, that sufficient moisture be present, that the garden be kept free of weeds, and that the soil be cultivated frequently and well."

GET SHORTSTOP JONES OF ST. LOUIS OUTFIT

Several New Players Signed for Try With Fort Wayn Club.

Several more players have been signed for workouts with the Fort Wayne Central leaguers and will show up for service tomorrow. Of those who are hooked up, there are Kelly, a long first sacker of class, and Lang, a portside hurler secured from Kansas City. One more player remains to be cinched and he is practically certain. This is Shortstop Jones, who has been with the St. Louis Nationals in training camp and has just been released.

When Jones signed with St. Louis it was with the understanding that if he did not make the team he would be turned loose to go where he pleased. In the training camp he worked out against a veteran and failed to make his place. Now he has accepted terms with Vandy's club and all that remains is to get his signed documents.

Training season opens up Monday and already the players are beginning to flock in. One of them will not be here, however, it being Plaxico, who has been called to join his regiment of the South Carolina national guards. The bosses have announced that during training anyone who wishes to watch the club work out will be admitted to the grandstand.

Exhibition games start a week from Sunday when the club divided into two sections, playing Mart Cleary's Lincoln Life club here and the Anderson club at Anderson. The following Sunday they again divide and play the Insurance men here and Kendallville. This will be blue envelope day, for at midnight following the two games the club starts for Evansville. Sixteen men will be carried for the first two weeks. On the way to the opening of the season games will be played at Vincennes on Monday, April 30; Lawrenceville, Ill., May 1, and Mount Carmel, Ill., May 2.

(By Paul Purman.)

Hughie Jennings, of the Detroit Tigers, has more than one reason for favoring a more stringent interpretation of the balk rule as applied to pitchers.

In the first place Jennings has Ty Cobb, perhaps the greatest base runner in the world, on his ball team; he has Donie Bush, Veach, and a number of other sprinters, but this is not the main reason Jennings has an antipathy for the way the umpires read the rules today.

A few months ago I asked major league baseball managers to give me their opinions on changes in the rules to permit more batting and base running. At that time I received a letter from Jennings stating his position firmly. He favored a one foul strike rule and also an order to umpires to make them more drastic in their interpretation of the present balk rules.

Jennings declares that base runners are thwarted in their efforts to steal second by false motions of pitchers. He believes that a pitcher should be penalized for a balk every time he maves a false motion, whether it is with his arms, shoulders or feet—any motion, in fact, which is inclined to deceive the base runner.

Jennings objects particularly to the southpaw pichers. Many of them, he says, face the plate directly and then throw the ball to first base as a base runner is taking a lead off on the sack.

In support of his theory Jennings cites the example of the old Baltimore Orioles.

For three consecutive years four men on that ball club stole about 250 bases a year. They were Jennings himself, McGraw, Joe Kelly and Willie Keeler. In the fourth year the average went above 280 when Jack Doyle joined the club. Jennings' theory is supported by the following figures, which shows what base stealing was in the American league last year:

The Detroit club stole 131 bases, Cobb copping 68, Veach 24, Young 20, and Bush 19.

The St. Louis club led the league in stolen bases with 146, the fleet Cuban, Marsans, pilfered 46. Shoton was second with 41, George Sisler had 34, and Miller 25.

Chicago stole 116 bases. Collins lead the club with 40, Jackson had 24, and Weaver 22. The surprising thing was with the Chicago club that a catcher, Schalk, was second with 30 steals.

Cleveland stole an even hundred bases, Speaker leading with 35. Roth stole 29, Chapman 21, and Turner 15.

Washington was next with 98. Milan pulled the largeny game 34 times, Shank and Foster were tied with 23, and Joe Judge had 18.

The Athletics stole 95 bases, Walsh leading with 30, Strunk had 21, and Witt 19.

The New York record was 78 stolen bases. Magee stole 29, Peckinpaugh 17, and Gilhooley and Pipp 16 each.

One of the mysteries of the league was that the Boston Red Sox, American league and national champions, stole less bases than any club in the league. They only copped 69. Hooper lead with 27, Lewis had 16, Dixie Walker 14, and Gardner 12.

There was not a club in the league with but two exceptions that stole as many bases as the four men on the old Orioles stole back in the 90's.

Army Officers Advise Schools to Retain All Their Sports.

In the first flush of excitement following the declaration of war, a number of colleges decided to give up athletic sports. The spirit of this action was no doubt commendable, but rather hasty as shown by the statements of a number of army officers a few days later, who advised colleges to retain their athletics and to add a certain amount of military drill.

There is no question about the patriotism of American colleges. Undergraduates have flocked to the colors in every war we have been in. Some of the larger colleges sent complete battalions during the civil war.

Army officers recognize this spirit of patriotism, but they also realize that while these young men are in college, before they are called to the front that they will be better prepared for military service if they continue their athletic activities.

Military training added to the regular course of college athletics is bound to aid in physical development. Baseball players who have participated in military drills during the training season are unanimous in their opinion that they have been benefied.

When the call comes for these college youths they will go.

Athletics and military drill combined will only make them more fitted for the work Uncle Sam will have laid out for them.

SHOP LEAGUERS HOLD FIRST WORKOUT TODAY

All Clubs But One Post Forfeits at Friday Night Meeting.

Initial workouts for Industrial Baseball League clubs were held this afternoon, with the five clubs now in all scheduled to practice. The Pennsy and Turner clubs used Lawton park, General Electric used Foster park, Dudlos used Swinney park and Bowser worked at Weisser.

At the meeting held in The Sentinel office last evening all clubs but the Western Gas came through with forfeit money. The Gasmen were not represented at the meeting and will probably be left in the cold. It is understood that the Federation of Labor will put in an outfit to fill out the circuit. The Wayne Oil Tanks who, earlier in the season, applied for admittance to the Industrial league, were not mentioned with regards to the vacancy, although it was understood that they were ready to post forfeit money at the first meeting.

Reports from the committee in charge of the dance held at the Moose hall last Wednesday, showed that the affair was a decided success, the financial end working out much better than was expected. The league will be well equipped when it comes to money matters this year and with this assured final arrangements can be made for the opening.

The next meeting of managers will be hel dat the home of Harry Cashdollar, 1436 Wells street, Saturday evening, April 21. Before this time all persons who wish to act as scorekeepers and umpires and who are qualified to hold the jobs are asked to communicate with the president, Frank O'Brien, telephone 6843.

RELIGION, TEMPERANCE AND HEALTH

Daily Bath and Rubbing Tone Skin and Prevent Colds.

There is no excuse now for shirking the daily bath—cold or merely tepid.

Cold baths, besides helping keep the body clean, generally are beneficial in the case of certain nervous troubles. They must never be too cold or too prolonged or the effects are apt to be depressing.

Sufferers from kidney disease should be very careful on the cold bath proposition, though. Frequently an increase in albuminuria has been noticed after them.

Massage is an excellent addition to bathing. It increases the circulation through the skin and muscles.

In addition to the daily cold bath or rubdown a hot bath should be taken once or twice a week. This bath had best be taken by first using water of the highest temperature that can be borne. Those who can stand it might continue to add hot water until the skin is quite red.

Abundant perspiration will then appear on the face, head and neck. After having perspired freely, cold water should be drawn into the bath until the tub has become quite cool.

Hot baths of long duration are especially useful in the case of kidney diseases or as a preventive of such. It is important to make sure that one's heart and blood vessels are in good condition before taking them.

Keeping Fit Patriotic Act in Time of War

Keeping in good health by right living is the patriotic duty of every American. Sickness will hamper the national efficiency, whether among soldiers or non-combatants. Disease prevention is a good form of preparedness.

The mobilization of the country's agricultural products must go hand in hand with preparations for putting factories and ammunition plants on a war footing. The health of a nation depends in a large measure upon its food.

The wanton destruction of food is as much of a traitorous act as sheltering a national enemy or destroying arms and ammunition.

The housewife must be economical in the preparation of food and must cook it well, so that meals will be tasty and digestible and waste will be eliminated.

Preparedness against preventable disease should include vaccination against typhoid and smallpox.

Germany saved enough men from smallpox in the past ten years to offset her terrific losses at Verdun, according to health experts.

Fewer men were killed in the armies of the north and south in the civil war than have died from typhoid fever in the United States in the past ten years. Yet this disease is entirely preventable.

Reduction of the infant mortality rate will help repair the wastages of war.

Figures compiled by Canadian health officials show that the Dominion's losses since the European war started are considerably less than the loss from preventable disease at home during the same period.

New York, April 14.—Can Billy Sunday make good in New York?

His critics have been saying New York will be his Waterloo, and that what got across elsewhere would not go here.

But even Billy himself thought the same thing a couple of years ago, and frankly fought shy of an evangelistic campaign in the world's biggest city.

And yet Sunday has been literally forced into the fight in New York. He has ben drawn into it in spite of himself and "Ma," for "Ma" Sunday feared this big town as much as Billy did and she did all she could, at one time, to keep him out of it.

But Billy Sunday is here—his great revival opened this week—and he's going to have the fight of his life—and he knows it. And New York will also know it before he gets through.

Billy believes that forces which have been opposing him in his campaigns in other cities are to make a united attack upon him here, and that they have raised a fund of half a million dollars to discredit him not only with the public, but with the church people.

I have often heard Sunday use the picturesque language for which he is famous, but when, in his first address, he paid his respects to the crowd that is after his scalp, for the first time since I've heard him, he hesitated because even his choice vocabulary did not contain words numerous and forceful enough to characterize the men he was "trimming."

Standing on top of his little pulpit he dared them to come on and do their "dirtiest."

The way Sunday proposes to do this is not by preaching a "new gospel." In his very first address, delivered to 20,000 people, he declared:

"I bring you nothing new. I'm an old-fashioned preacher of the old-religion. I have no use for the doctrine of the universal Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man."

And when "Rody," Sunday's leader of the music, sang his first solo, he selected one about the "old-fashioned faith," in which he warned his hearers to "flee from the terrors of hell."

"This world is going to hell so fast she's breaking the speed limit," said Sunday.

Here, then, is the kyenote of this greatest of modern evangelistic campaigns in America's biggest city. It's the old-time religion that "was good enough for mother," and which its exponents say "is good enough for me."

And the most experienced "observer"—theological professors, social workers, church officials, professors of psychology—are watching the campaign with critical eye, not necessarily opposed to it, but intensely interested in learning how the message and the method which got across in other cities will get across in what is everywhere admitted to be the hardest city in America to reach with any kind of campaign.

Sunday made his first big hit with the crowd when he said that after his workers are paid and all legitimate expenses are met, every dollar of the "free-will offering" will go to the work of the Red Cross society and the army workers of the Young Men's Christian association.

It will be interesting to watch the outcome of this battle royal during the next three months. Next to the war, it will be the biggest feature engaging the attention of the metropolis.

More than this, the Sunday campaign will attract the attention of the Christian forces of the world, because this is the most highly organized and in some respects the most important evangelistic campaign conducted in the recent history of the church.

Back of the campaign are some of the most prominent and successful business men in this country. They are putting into it all the genius that made their own enterprises stand out in the commercial world.

Actively engaged as committeemen and special workers are some of the best known religious leaders on two hemispheres.

I saw on the platform at the opening meeting men who are famous the world over. And way back at the rear, scarcely observed even by those near him, modestly sat John D. Rockefeller, jr., who, with several other men of great wealth, are members of the committee responsible for the Billy Sunday campaign.

Whatever the genius of experts would furnish or money could buy, which was regarded as necessary to make his campaign win, has been supplied.

And so New York, which has been called "The Graveyard of Preachers," because almost every minister of prominence who came here to "save New York" has soon been buried out of sight—New York, which listened for a few days to Dowie of Zion City, then laughed and forgot him—New York, which caused even Moody, the greatest evangelist of the last generation, to seem to have finally lost his grip—New York, the city to which everybody wants to go before they go to heaven—New York has Billy Sunday to see if he cannot "save it from hell."

Short Sermon to Parents

"And that their children, who have not known, may hear and learn to fear Jehovah your God."

Have you ever seriously considered, dear parent, that your child is altogether dependent upon you for every moral and spiritual truth? As the child mind gradually unfolds and God becomes a factor, your love and self-sacrifice and ways are the only forces that help to form a true idea of God in the soul. There is no earthly influence greater. The physician and the minister are the closest and most confidential friends in your family life, but they cannot take your place. To the child mind you are supreme. As you live, so God lives. As you love or hate, so God loves or hates. God is unerringly interpreted in your life. You are to the child mind the logos of God.

Mark the words of the text: "And that their children, who have not known." There are parents who shut God out from the life of their child. They do not mean to do it. It is a negative crime.

Their ambitions toward the child are most excellent. The very best linguist and the most modern dancing master are secured. The child is taught everything that modern conditions include, except religion. God is not known. There are thousands of children in America who know as little about God as the darkest child in Africa. They never hear God's name in reverence. They are taught nothing of his word. They never kneel before him. And the total responsibility rests upon the parent.

"And that their children may hear and learn to fear Jehovah your God." How may this be accomplished? Remember that nothing can take the place of the home. You cannot substitute Sunday school or church. The supreme duty of the parent is to present to the child the name of Jehovah, that he may be feared.

Dear parent, so teach your child that the name of Jehovah may be revered. That is at once your highest responsibility and greatest privilege.

MAKING OPPORTUNITIES

"I wish I could find an opportunity to call on our new neighbor," said young Mrs. Horton to her Aunt Eunice, who sat in a rocker beside the gas stove, while her niece was busy ironing.

Aunt Eunice had just arrived and had promised to make a "good long visit." From "way out West" to far "down East" was a distance too long to be traversed without quite an interval of rest between the journeys.

"Do you have to 'find' opportunities here in the East? In the West we usually make them," Aunt Eunice observed with a twinkle in her eye.

Her niece, looking up quickly, caught it, and replied with an attempt at humor: "Well, yes, Aunt Eunice, we are often obliged to hunt far and long for opportunities here in the East—we really do. You accomplish such wonderful stunts out West, though, that I really can not doubt your assertion about 'making' them, but I'd really like to hear how you do it."

"Why, we do it something after this fashion. If a stranger moves into the neighborhood we don't wait to get our washing and ironing and baking, and a thousand and one other hindrances out of the way, before extending to her 'the right hand of fellowship.' We drop everything and run right over, if it is only for five minutes; tell her how glad we are she has come to live among us, and then go home and tidy up. It doesn't hinder half as much as you think it will when you stop to consider ways and means, and before you know it, almost, you have done a friendly act and your work has scarcely missed you."

Before Aunt Eunice had ceased speaking her sprightly niece had smoothed her ruffled hair, whisked off her apron, turned off the gas and stood waiting for her aunt's closing words.

"If you don't mind staying alone for a while, auntie, I'll follow your instructions and 'make' by first opportunity," she remarked whimsically. "Guess it is about as easy to 'make' as to 'find,'" she averred. And before Aunt Eunice had recovered from her surprise her niece was half way across the street.

THE ESSENTIAL POWER.

History is more reliable as an interpreter than theology; theology speculates, history records. Jesus said, "And ye shall received power after that the Holy Ghost has come upon you." He had a great work to commit to unfit hands; an uncompleted work to leave to "unlearned and ignorant men." They were to receive power. Not a power to work miracles; not a power to organize men for service; not a power of learning, in all of which the world has grown weary in vain efforts at redemption, says J. F. Burnett, in the Herald of Gospel Liberty.

These unfit men waited ten days, during which they prayed, and then the power came; it filled their hearts and rested in lambent flame and quivering force upon all their lives.

Out there in the temple area is a surging multitude of men, of the same sort which made up the mob around Pilate's judgment seat. These power-filled men tell them plainly and without apology that they had crucified the sent of heaven, and that his blood stained their garments. Why did not that crowd cry "Away with these men. Crucify them, as we did their Master? Instead of that hissing, hateful cry, which had rent the air but fifty days before, a head goes down here, a sob breaks forth there, and the whole vast throng is convulsed with sorrow, and cries out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" And the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. Two churches were now in Jerusalem; the one with millions of members and a magnificent temple in which to worship, the other a little company of three thousand souls, without temple, history, or ritual. The masses believed in the church that worshiped in the temple, but the power was in the church of Pentecost.

The church that had no living Christ was doomed; its house was desolate, and its power gone. The wealth of the world was at the disposal of the one; poverty marked the other.

Yet the one with temple and wealth and prestige ceased; the one with power increased.

In the light of this historic event we can understand why the Master dared to leave his uncompleted work in hands so unfit to receive it. They could not be fit until the Holy Ghost had come upon them. Had they undertaken to write the life of our Lord before Pentecost, we would have had more curious details, but the living gospel would have been wanting.

Who knows the number of such biographies that may have been written and have perished along with the powerless, Holy Ghostless sermons that have been preached.

MILK, NOT BEER.

(Portland, Ore., Telegram.)

Another illustration of the withering influence of prohibition on Oregon industry is afforded in the sale of a large Portland brewery plant to an important dairying concern which will at once convert the closed establishment into huge condensary. About 75 per cent of the former brewing plant was found to be available for condensing milk. The extensive refrigerating section will require little or no improvement or alteration.

Viewed merely as an agency for promoting the development of Oregon industries how does a condensed milk concern compare with a brewery? Is milk as valuable a product as hops or barley? Does a brewery employ more labor all the year round? Is an industry which turns a stream of "outside" money into the state a more valuable asset to the state than an industry which cuts continually into the wages of laboring men for a very expensive but worthless luxury?

Taking another view is it not a matter for public congratulation that a brewery which manufactured a very inferior and costly food (a few scientists assert that beer contains nourishment while other scientists dispute the claim) should be supplanted by an industry that puts out the best food in the world? The Telegram would like to see every idle brewery in Oregon and Washington converted into a condensed milk plant.

Wasting Children.

"The cruel waste of child-life is largely traceable to the drink habit," says Dr. Mary D. Sturge, a widely known British writer on medical and scientific matters. "The drink habit causes semi-starvation to thousands of growing children. It is a potent cause of miscarriage and other failures of the germ cell to mature into a perfect child. It encourages the ravages of syphilis and gonorrhea, those arch-enemies of the race. An increase in the consumption of beer and spirits is always marked by an increase in the infant death rate."

Print of the Nails.

(Westminster Teacher.)

It may not be easy to give such marks of the Shepherd's voice as to enable the Christian to know infallibly whether the solicitations that come to him are indeed from Christ. But there are certain characteristics which always distinguish His calls. There is a story that once there came to the cell of a saintly monk one who knocked and asked for admittance. His mien was lordly and majestic. "Who art thou?" asked the saint. "I am Jesus," was the answer. There was something in the voice and manner of the visitor, however, which made the monk suspect that he was not the Holy One he claimed to be. "Where is the print of the nails?" he asked. Instantly the stranger turned and fled away. It was Satan—not Christ. Nothing is of Christ which does not bear this mark.

He Read the Bible

President John Quincy Adams, known as the "Old Man Eloquent," who attributed his powers of expression to the habit of reading the Bible through every year, by devoting to it the first fifteen minutes of each day, giving his soul regularly a breakfast of Bible truth before he fed his body, said: "I speak as a man of the world to men of the world; and I say to you, search the Scriptures. The Bible is the book of all others to be read at all ages, and in all conditions of human life; not to be read once or twice or thrice through, and then laid aside, but to be read in small portions of one or two chapters every day, and never to be intermitted, unless by some overruling necessity."

We may think we are truly busy when we are really only restless, and a little studied retirement would greatly enrich our returns. We are great only as we are God-possessed; and scrupulous appointments in the upper room with the Master will prepare us for the toil and hardships of the most strenuous campaign.—J. H. Jowett.

Faith's Simplicity.

(St. Louis Christian Advocate.)

A young man, distressed about his soul, confided in a friend. The friend said: "Did you ever learn to float?" "Yes, I did," was the surprised reply. "And did you find it easy to learn?" "Not at first," he answered. "What was the difficulty?" his friend pursued. "Well, the fact was I could not lie still; I could not believe or realize that the water would hold me up without any effort of my own, so I always began to struggle, and, of course, down I went at once." "And then?" "Then I found out that I must give up the struggle, and just rest on the strength of the water to bear me up. It was easy enough after that; I was able to lie back in the fullest confidence that I should never sink." "And is not God's Word more worthy of your trust than the changeable sea? He does not bid you wait for feelings: He commands you to rest in Him, to believe His Word, and accept His gift."

A PRAYER.

One day when a great convention of lawyers and constitution writers was assembled in New York, the chaplain was unexpectedly absent.

The president of the assembly was the Honorable Elihu Root. Without a moment's hesitation he arose and offered an impromptu prayer. He could not have thus prayed had it not been his habit to pray. No man, no matted what his intelligence, can pray intelligently in public on the spur of the moment without long practice.

The drowning man never learns to swim. Here is Mr. Root's prayer. What an effect it would have if many men were praying this same prayer with sincerity.

"Almighty God, guide us in our deliberations. Make us humble and devoted to the public service. Make us wise and considerate of the feelings, the opinions and the rights of others. Make us effective and useful for the advancement of Thy cause of peace and justice and liberty of the world."

JEALOUSY AND SLANDER.

(Rev. Madison C. Peters, D. D., in the Watchman and Examiner.)

Jealousy is the acknowledgment of inferiority, the ungracious compliment paid to excellence.

Jealousy is a frenzy that cannot endure even in idea the good of others.

The prosperity that surrounds others pains jealous eyes more than the meridian rays of the sun.

The mention of a successful rival's name throws some folks into convulsions, and like the cuttle fish they emit their black venom to darken the clear waters that surround their more prosperous neighbor.

The poets imagined that envy dwelt in a dark cave, pale and lean, looking asquint, abounding with gall, her teeth black, never rejoicing but in the misfortune of others, ever unquiet and continually tormenting herself.

Don't groan when others shout.

Don't grow uncomfortable as others grow happy.

Instead of fretting that others are preferred before you in honor or estate, in gifts or usefulness, bless God for their influence.

What if others are more popular than you are? What if others are wiser? Be thankful that there is one star in the firmament above yourself.

What if others have the praise of men, while you have the bitter root to chew? Praise God that there is somebody not troubled as you are.

As birds peck most at the best fruit, so the worthiest persons are often most slandered.

Slander would starve and die if nobody took it in and gave it lodging.

There are so many open mouths because there are so many open ears.

If you listen to a story, false or true, you are equally guilty with the one who tells it, and, as an old writer says, "you ought both to be hung, the one by the law and the other by the tongue."

Business is business, but the best kind of business is to mind your own business, and the reason why those people succeed so well who mind their own business is because there is so little competition.

The work of the masculine gad-about is mainly with the embarrassments of business.

You sell your automobile because you have no use for it. The envious peddler of nux vomica utters some suspicions in regard to your credit. "He sold his machine; I guess he had to sell it. I think he is going down. I wonder if he can stand the pressure?"

A suspicion gets started, and everybody wants his money right away. Though your assets are four times your liabilities, crash! Everything goes! Men are whispered into bankruptcy every day.

Don't employ yourself in discovering others' faults. Look for your own.

The man who never made a mistake is a myth.

If you look through a telescope in the usual way it magnifies the object seen; reverse it and the large and near seems small. Men often look at their own faults through one end, and at their neighbor's faults through the other.

When you catch yourself making a detracting remark, say something approving in the same breath, and you will soon be cured of slander.

Don't be hasty to credit evil reports. They are generally the result of misunderstanding, of evil design, of envy, or they proceed from an exaggerated and partial disclosure of the facts.

Wait and learn the whole story before you decide, and believe no more than the evidence compels you, and then preserve loving silence.

(Emma Thorp Hale.)

How easy it is to grow discouraged "when life's perils thick confound us." How hard to be hopeful and happy at such times. Yet we should not feel discouraged or hopeless, for God is the same kind Father in times of gloom that he is when all is bright. He is just as near, though we may not be as conscious of his presence, as at other times. Sometimes he seems even nearer in our times of distress, for he sees our sore need and stands ready to succor.

If we could only feel the assurance of his love at all times, and it is our privilege to do so, we would not go about with gloom in our hearts because we are denied the blessings that we crave, or are called on to bear heavy burdens.

God loves us—loves us in bright days, loves us during the gloomy night, loves us always.

With infinite patience, he waits for us to learn the lesson he would teach us; never faltering in his loving purpose for us, even though we murmur and complain. Yet, even though we cry to him for relief, he, with steady purpose, yet in greatest tenderness, gives us the hard lesson to learn. Through blinding tears, oftentimes, we puzzle over the weighty problem, while watching, encouraging and guiding the great Teacher keeps us to our task. When we have learned our lesson, and have seen the purpose of it all, we are ready to thank him that he kept us to it. We rejoice that he did not stop our crying. Some of us stay in life's kindergarten a long time, because we are such dull pupils, and will not apply our hearts unto wisdom. We would rather gaze idly about, or take the valuable moments for playing than to plunge into the difficulties and conquer them.

Oh, that we may be apt pupils, learning life's lessons as they come to us, asking God's guidance and wisdom in all our ways. Some day he shall say, "Come up higher;" and then all the vexing problems, all the perplexing lessons shall no more vex us, for he shall teach us all the mysteries of his kingdom, and show us all that we did not understand while here below.

Let us take courage and apply ourselves to wisdom with fresh vigor. Let us take up the task that lies before us, resolved to conquer all the difficulties. We shall have all eternity in which to understand God's dealings with us. We shall grieve no more over the burdens and difficulties for there will be none. In heaven's clear light we shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known, and our voices shall be raised in joyful praise to him who loved us, and gave himself for us.

COMING TO THE MAJESTIC MONDAY NIGHT.

New York Winter Garden's Pretty Girls in "A World of Pleasure."

IN THE THEATERS

AT THE MAJESTIC.

"A WORLD OF PLEASURE."

New York Winter Garden's Display of Beauty and Fashion Monday.

While it is not advertised as a fashion show, "A World of Pleasure," the huge Winter Garden spectacle coming to the Majestic next Monday evening, offers as a very important feature of its colossal entertainment a gorgeous array of the very latest gowns in a manner to fill the hearts of the fair members of the audience with envy and longing. While Winter Garden productions have always been noted for their costuming, of recent years woman's attire applicable to ordinary street usage has become a decided feature. In many of the cities in which this latest one, "A World of Pleasure," has been offered to the public, designers and women in private life have industriously copied the extremely fashionable gowns worn by the stately and beautiful show girls. In odrer to keep the production in the matter of costuming right up to the very last second, complete changes of wardrobe have been made by the management at frequent intervals, for while this involves a tremendous expense, the direectors of the Winter Garden knowing full well the value of feminine interest, have considered the expenditure well worth while.

Nor have they been lax in the selection of their living models. New York's beauty market has been ransacked for the fairest type of the chorus girl. Even when on tour the high standard of excellence has been maintained, and hundreds of dollars have been expended in railroad fares for the transportation of these beauties from the Broadway central market to the cities in which the attraction will appear.

But beauty, fashion, scenic equipment and melody are not the only features worthy of praise in this tremendous entertainment. A cast of stars which reads for all the world like an announcement of a metropolitan benefit is added to the foregoing attractions. And after all of the above excellent features are exploited one must not forget the splendid special orchestra which so delightfully interprets the many haunting melodies found in the score of this pleasing entertainment. It is one of the noteworthy pleasures of the show.

Gracie Emmett, the little laughmaker, with a company of co-conspirators against the blues, will present the lively mile-a-minute farce company, "Mrs. Murphy's Second Husband." Olive Briscoe, that unusual comedienne; the Cycling McNutts in a wheel act de luxe; Jessie and Dollie Miller in melodies and dances; and the two loose pages from the book of fun, Fred Holmes and Lulu Wells in Louis Weslyn's comedy, "On the Door Step," are other big league attractions on this bill.

Lona's Hawaiians, a sextette of native musicians, five instrumentalists and vocalists and one girl exponent of the hula hula are topping the bill which closes this evening. The bill includes Rayno's Bull Dogs in a canine romp; Morton Hopkins and Lola Axtell in the little laugh skit, "Traveling;" Hufford and Chain, the clever pair of versatile entertainers; the Olmstends, in feats of strength and muscular posing, and Stein, Hume and Thomas, the melodious trio with the splendid voices.

PACIFIST FIRED FROM CHICAGO'S PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Chicago, April 14.—Oscar M. Heath, a teacher in one of the public high schools, has been suspended by Jacob M. Loeb, president of the board of education, for the issuance of an anti-war pamphlet. In the pamphlet the teacher attacks the policy of the American government, states that the war is for "mercenary gains and not for humanity or liberty, and that a league between the governments and financiers is responsible for the entrance of the United States." Mr. Heath said that he was having 1,000 of the pamphlets printed for distribution today and asserted that he would be at his place in the school Monday and would fight the matter in the courts i fnecessary to retain his position. UNCLE SAM'S NAVAL HEROES.

DAVID G. FARRAGUT.

David Glasgow Farragut is the naval hero of the civil war, the hero of Mobile bay and the man who opened the Mississippi to commerce for the northern states.

Farragut was born at Campbell's station, near Knoxville, Tenn., July 5, 1801, the son of Maj. George Farragut, a veteran of the revolution. He received an early naval training and became midshipman at the age of 9. He took part in the capture of prizes during the war with England in 1812.

During his stay in the navy, Farragut added to his education, ending with a lecture course at Yale. He was in charge of several ships and navy yards, until the civil war, when he was put in command of the expedition to capture New Orleans and open the Mississippi.

With a fleet of 48 vessels, Farragut gained the mouth of the Mississippi and pushed up until he got between Forts Jackson and St. Philip. A heavy chain was stretched across the river, torpedoes were planted in the channel and fire rafts awaited the wooden ships.

An officer told Farragut of the chain and torpedoes.

"Damn the torpedoes!" Farragut replied and, turning to his pilot, commanded, "Go ahead"

Forming into two lines, the fleet moved up toward the chains, then putting on all steam possible they shot forward. The fire rafts were lighted and set adrift among Farragut's ships, both forts showered the fleet with shot and torpedoes were exploding.

But Farragut's ships passed the forts ,then the torpedo field and finally broke through the chains.

On April 25, 1862, Farragut captured New Orleans with a loss of 37 killed, 47 wounded and one gunboat lost. Three days later Farragut ran the batteries of Vicksburg and the whole river was open.

Next July Farragut was made rear admiral, in which position he won the battle of Mobile bay, on Aug. 5, 1864. He became vice admiral Dec. 22, 1864, by special act of congress, and admiral next year in the same way. He died Aug. 4, 1870.

COUNCIL ON MILITARY AND NAVAL AFFAIRS

Patriotism glowed in the hearts of everyone who heard the address given Friday evening by H. H. Merrick, of Armour and Co., Chicago, to the members of the Quest club and guests at the Anthony hotel. Fired by this enthusiasm a council on military and naval affairs was formed to which twenty-six organizations in the city informally pledged their support.

This new body is to serve largely as a clearing house for patriotic movements and enterprises. This body will prevent the duplication of such meetings and events. All organizations in the city are asked to co-operate in the movement.

W. H. Scheiman of the Quest club and Real Estate exchange, was named president and Charles R. Lane, temporary secretary. A meeting scheduled for Monday noon at the Commercial club has been called at which time the organization will be perfected.

Mr. Merrill's address on "Organization" was an interesting one in every respect and he imparted information pointing out the immediate need of preparedness or in other words organization. He stated that it was not because we do not know how that it has not been done because Yankee ingenuity is greater than German.

He concluded by saying:

"I think we have cause to praise the Lord on high because He has led us into higher things, where ideals count, where the future will daze the conception of the brotherhood of man, when the things Washington stood for will be given some weight, when we stand in the war of sixteen nations as the leaders, and that our sons and daughters will know no flag so dear, as the dear old flag I see on the walls."

We will guarantee you more clothes value for the amount invested than you can possibly get elsewhere.

Superfluous Hair Now Removed Roots and All!
(New and Instantaneous Home Methods.)

A boon to women troubled with superfluous hair is the new phelactine process. It is totally unlike the depilatory, electrical and other methods heretofore employed for the removal of hairy growths. It is the only thing that enables one to remove the hair completely—roots and all—in one's own home, without the assistance of an expert. The result cannot be doubted, for the user sees the hair-roots with her own eyes.

A stick of phelactine, with easy directions, can be had at any drugsore. It is entirely harmless (a child could safely eat it), odorless and non-irritating. Always sold under a money-back guarantee. It is an instantaneous method, and so horough that the skin is left perfectly smooth and hairless, bearing not the least evidence of its former disfigurement.—Advertisement.

ONE MAN CAN CARRY UNCLE SAM'S LATEST MACHINE GUN.

Army officers are enthusiastic over a new machine gun recently adopted by the army. The weapon has a remarkable advantage over existing machine guns in that it is so small that it may be carried by one man and can be fired from the shoulder. Two men are necessary in the operation of the gun, one to carry extra barrels and bandoliers of ammunition. The gun is said to be free from the danger of choking and the barrels can be changed almost instantly when heated from rapid firing.

EDDYTORIUL ON "NOTHINK A TALL!"

Deer Beluvved Reeders of the Boogle, Greetings!—If when you pick up this ishue of the Bugle expeckting to read a eddytoriul on some turrible deep and scientiffick subjeck (sutch as you are generally ackustumd to reeding in this collum) we feer you will be awful disappinted becuz writink a eddytoriul on such a subjeck as that (or enny other subjeck, for that matter) is farthest from our thorts at this time.

"Why is it farthest from our thorts?" you nacherly ask, and we anser, "Thats a fair questshion." The reason its farthest from our thorts gentle and dosile reeder is that the chief reason we aint a goin to dash off a eddytoriul in this collum on this occashion is that we have raked and skraped our eddytoriul brain until its nearly raw and if it was to save our life from the gallus we cant think up enny remaining subjeck to write about that we aint alreddy wrote about in the past. Besides we have a bad cold in our head this wk. and our brain aint working very well ennyhow.

In other words the time has at last came in our eddytoriul career (& its a wonder to us that it aint come sooner) when weve got to throw up our hands in deespair and admit to our humiliashion & shame that we cant write a eddtyoriul for this ishue.

We have been expeckting to haft to make this confeshion for lo these menny yrs. but we have allus managed to stave it off until now. We repeet that we not only have been expeckting it, but we are amazed & surprised and shocked that it aint happend before this. There has been some wks when we thort to goodness that we couldnt git no subjeck under the sun whitch we haddent on some former occashion wrote a eddytoriul about, but somehow or other before the Boogle went to press we managed to think up somethink to write a eddytoriul about by a turrible mental effort.

But this wk it aint no use! We cant think of nothink—absolootely nothing. Our head dont seem to have no more idees in it for eddytoriul than a block of wood, so at last well haft to go to press with this ishue of the Bugle disgrased so to speek.

As a result youll all haft to wait until next wk for a eddytoriul, by whitch time we hope to be able to take our eddytoriul pen in hand and dash off a red hot eddytoriul about somethink or other with our ushual vim, vigger & et cettery.

Fite Twixt Lem & Seth

It All Started Becuz Lem Couldn't Git His Boots Offen His Feet! --Exsitiug Details as Per Below!

Lem Brown our expert carpenter had a curus axident to happen to him tother day whitch was ruther pecooliar & unushual.

Lem had been repairing some fence thru a piece of swamp land on the edge of his farm betwixt the swamp and a pastchure where he keeps his cows being as the cows the wk before had went acrost into the swamp and got lost as fur as Lem was concernd, but probly the cows diddent feel lost. Anyways it was two days afore he found em in the swamp and being as they haddent been milked in that time their bags was so full of milk they was fit to bust.

Be that as it may Lem made up his mind to repair that fence and so he spent all day last Tuesday sloppin around in the mud fixin up the fence and as a result of standin in the worter his boots was wet inside and out also his feet and when Lem tried to pull his boots offen his feet about 7 p. M. that evg perparatory to retiring he was a good eal surprised and disgusted to find that they was shrunk up to sitch a degree that he couldnt pull em off by meens of the old wood bootjack whitch he has used for the past 15 yrs and whitch aint nevver failed him yit.

Lem puld & tugd and growld and grunted but he couldnt git enny of his boots off either neither foot nor tother. Mary Lems wife who was a settin by the settin room table beside the lamp reedin the bible askd Lem if he wanted her to help him pull his boots offen his feet for him, but Lem anserd her purty sharp tellin her how in Sam Hill could she expeck to be strong enuff to pull his boots for him if the bootjack couldnt do it!

Then Lem set down in a chair exosted as you mite say to rest up and git his breth so he could make a further effort with the bootjack. As Lem set there tired restin in his wet shrunk boots he dozed off and when he woked up three hours later the lamp was turned down and the clock on the mantel said 10 p. M. and he knowd his wife had went to bed and that like a blamed fool he had been sleepin there all that time when he ort to of been in bed.

His boots was now dride off some but they was pintchin his feet worsen ever so Lem he jumpd up and tride the boot jack agin determind to pull them boots off or bust in the a tent and thats whut he come tarnashion neer doing—that is busting in the atemt.

As bad luck would have it Lems foot slipd outen the bootjack and he fell over backards striking his head agnst a old chiny closet behint him and breaking out a hull glass door to say nothink of breaking considable chiny into the bargain!

It stund Lem for a minnit but when he reulised whot he had did he grabd up that bootjack and hauld off and with all his strenth he throwd it thru the sittin room winder as hard as he could slam it breakin out three lights of glass and reckin the sash like every think!

Then when Lem reulised that his quick temper had made him do more damage than ever he resorted to perfanitty and Missus Sim Hines next door who was woked up becuz he swore so loud says that she nevver lissend to sitch awful shockin langwidge in all her born days.

Jest then there was a knock come on the door of Lems front door and he went and opend it wondering who in Sam Hill would be a calling on him that time of night and what they would want?

When Lem opend the door, there stood Seth Dewberry our lion harted town constubble holdin his head in one hand and his six shooter revolver in tother!

"What in dognashion did you hit me a wallop behint the ear with that gorrammed bootjack fer?" says Seth shakin his revolver so clost under Lems nose that he could almost smell the catridges in it!

"I diddent know I hit you with no bootjack!" says Lem a good eal surprised.

"Well, you done so," says Seth very bitter "and if you dont beleeve it look at this swellin areddy behint my ear whitch is haff as big as a hens egg and I calkilate it will be as big as a goose egg when it gits al sweld up to its full size! Purty howdydoo I cant be a walkin along the st in pursoot of my dooties & gardin the lifes and homes of the cittizens of Bingville aginst desprit criminals & burglars without havin some fiend in huming form like you throw a bootjack thru a winder when Ime passin peacable and try to dash my brains out with it! Fer two cts Ide a rest you fer assalt and battery, hittin by meens of a bootjack with intent to kill, et cettery too numerus to mentchion and cast you in doorants vile in the town lockup."

"You dont need to talk quite so important under my roof!" says Lem purty snappy. "Dont fergit Seth Dewberry that this is my house and I calkilate to do purty mutch as I please when Ime inside of it even to the throwin of bootjacks outen winders and I also calkilate that other folks even constubbels cant come into my house and talk to me without considable impoonitty!"

"To who do you refer, or to me?" says Seth bristlin up and shakin his revolver closter under Lems nosen ever!

"Yes, to you, Seth Dewberry!" snarls Lem, "And if you dont take that dingbusted pistil outen my fase Ile grab it outen your hand and hit you a belt over the head with it!"

Jest then Seth to show his othoritty tride to stick the pistil a leetle mite closter to Lems fase and prodded him in the nose with it! Thereupon Lem who was alreddy mad with whot all had happend to him grabd the pistil outen Seths hand like he promisd he would & hit Seth a crack with it alongside the jaw!

Next minnit Lem & Seth both was clinchd and rasslin all over the room in a struggel to the deth figgeratively speakin. All to onct Lems foot slipd and he fell over backwards with Seth on top of him who come down so hard that he like to of squoze the life outen Lemuel who hollerd "Help! Help!" as loud as he could holler.

This woked up Mary Lems wife who had alreddy went to bed who come arunning down stairs in her nightgown & not fit to be saw in publick but when she seen Seth Dewherry a gittin the best of her Lem she grabd up the stove poker and hit him acrost the neck with it with sitch vilence that Seth jumpd up and lit outen the house like the Old Scratch was after him.

Then she tride to help Lem git them boots off but it wassent no use—they stuck on like as if they was glued and to make a long story short Lem had to go to bed with his boots on and slept in em all nite but he managed to git em offen his feet next mornink.

Seths neck is still turrible where Mary hit him with the stove poker and he says he is a going to bring suit fer damages aginst Lem for assalting a officer of the law in pursoot of his dooty, but Seth says he diddent assalt Lem being as it was his wife Mary who done so and if Seth brings soot he'll bring soot aginst him for breaking & enterng—speshially "breaking" up his furnichoor.

Missus Cy Hoskins while browsing around in a dark corner of her celler tother day found a qt glass jar of jam whitch she had put up five yrs ago and whitch she diddent know she had on hand. That evg she opend it for supper and set a dishful of it before her husband Cy who is a great hand for jam. Cy he pitchd into it like everythink and tuk a whole big tablespoonful of it into his fase before he even tasted it and found to his intense disgust that the jam was fermented and spiled and not fit to ete a tall. Cy says it tasted to him a good deal like the cement whitch he uses to patch his rubber boots and made him so sick as a dog to his stummick that he had to git up from the supper table and go out into the fresh air and after that happend he diddent want a bite of supper.

Bud Hinckley who aint quite rite in his head playd barber like our tonsorial artist Harve Hines tother day by gitting the ole fambily cat into a corner and trying to cut its hair for it with his mothers shears, but when instid of cutting the cats hair Bud cut into its tail and the cat turnd on Bud and spit in his fase and scratched him on the hand until it bled and he hollerd and bellerd for his mother to come to the rescue. In our opinyun we dont blame the cat.

The tea was a grand sucksess. There was only one think to mar the happiness of the occashion whitch was when Miss Amelia axidentally insted of pouring tea into Missus Ame Hillyers teacup poured it into her lap! Missus Hillyer was turrible mad being as she said the tea in her lap would ruin her silk skirt and besides it was hottern blazes! After Missus Hillyer had called Miss Amelia a "Cat" and several other names too numerus to mentchion she pickd up and went home maddern a wet hen.

Effective Masking of Objects By Vines and Shrubs

If There Are Unsightly Rear Views, Permanent Vines, or Groups of Shrubs Should Be Provided in Order to Hide Such Objects—If a Garden or Stable Is Near the House, Plantings Should Be Made So As to Effectively Shut These Areas From View.

(By L. C. CORBETT.)

Climbing plants meet a demand in the adornment of a place which can be filled neither by trees nor shrubs. Trees and shrubs can be used to hide unsightly objects from a distance, but vines serve the same purpose as the draperies of a garment; they mask by covering unsightly objects.

Vines have a peculiar value indecorative planting in that as a class they are shade enduring; yet many of the best decorative plants of this group thrive to perfection in full sunlight. Since many vines will thrive in partial shade as well as in full sunlight, they lend themselves well to porch and arbor decoration. A few have the power to attach themselves to bare walls, thus making them extremely useful in covering rough brick, stone, or wooden walls, giving them an effect of age, beauty, and appropriateness which can not be produced by artists and architectural materials. Two of the best vines for covering walls are the Boston ivy and the English ivy.

Vines which attach themselves to wire or wood supports and are chiefly valuable because of their covering and shading effects are the clematis, with all its varied forms, the wistaria, the trumpet flower, and the Actinidia and Akebia, both valuable cover plants. For sandy regions either as a soil binder or as an arbor or trellis cover none of the vines is more useful than the Japanese honeysuckle. There are many other good honeysuckles grown for decorative purposes, but none is more rapid-growing or freer from insect pests and fungous diseases than the Japanese honey-suckle. In this catalogue of valuable vines two more of our native vines justly merit high places—the five-fingered ivy and the bittersweet.

Annual vines may also serve a useful purpose about a new place. The perennial woody vines are slow growing, and usually make but little shade or protection during the first two or three years after planting. With annual plants, however, the case is quite different. Many annual climbing vines have a profusion of leaves, grow rapidly and luxuriantly, and afford a simple, inexpensive, yet satisfactory means of securing an immediate screen. For best results with these plants special attention to early planting, often indoors, is essential. When planting-out time arrives, place them in a rich, well-drained soil, and at all times maintain an abundant supply of moisture. Under such conditions use the moonflower, the morning-glory, the cypress vine, the hyacinth, bean, nasturtiums for low screens and lattices, and the wild cucumber for taller structures. Rustic summer houses and arbors may be very beautifully and satisfactorily adorned with cobœa, or with wild cucumber, during the time which must elapse before the permanent vines can be grown sufficiently to cover the structure.

The comparative value of shrubs and perennial grasses and herbaceous annual bedding plants is at once apparent. Residents of the country or of suburban places have difficulty in securing suitable herbaceous plants in sufficient quantities to produce rich effects, and even if such plants can be obtained in profusion they can not take the place of shrubs and grasses either as cover plants or as screens or wind-breaks. A complete arrangement requires a harmonious use of both shrubs and annual herbaceous plants.

For quick results, however, where shrubs of large size can not be secured or are too expensive, a temporary effect can be produced by the use of tall-growing, broad-leaved plants, such as the castor bean, the canna, and the caladium. The castor bean grows rapidly, is easily propagated from seed, and comes true to variety, affording in one plant a wide range in color of foliage and in stature. This plant frequently grows 6 to 8 feet in height from seed, even as far north as New York, in a single season. Its broad-spreading habit, together with its attractive foliage, which in well-nourished plants is retained well down to the ground, renders the castor bean a very satisfactory makeshift or substitute for shrubbery where screens and masking masses are needed. The trouble with all such makeshifts is that they produce an effect which lasts for a few months only, while with shrubs the benefit is lasting and they serve quite as useful a purpose in the way of shelter belts and screens in winter as during the summer. For the sake of variety, the caladium and canna can be used to good advantage in connection with the castor bean. The tall habit of the canna and the broad leaves of the caladium render them well fitted for massing. Such plants as the castor bean, the canna, and the caladium can be used to good purpose in shrub borders and masking groups before the shrubs are sufficiently grown to produce the effect desired. Even after the shrubs have grown sufficiently to accomplish the end sought an occasional mass of castor beans, asters, eulalias, or arundo interspersed at intervals will lend variety and life to the groups.

There are several varieties of shrubs that can be planted on the farm-yard lawn which will greatly enhance the beauty of the place. One of the most graceful of these is the Weeping Mulberry, which will produce a perfect mountain of foliage. Its long branches fall to the ground on all sides, completely hiding the trunk of the shrub. The Golden Syringa and Golden Elder are so attractive, and both grow very rapidly. Feathery Hemlocks are also desirable shrubs to have in the yard. Every farmer should have some shrubbery. After it has once been installed in the yard it will prove its worth and command as much attention as any other branch of outdoor gardening.

In addition to a well-executed general planting plan the successful development of a place depends on the preparation and fertilization of the soil, the pruning and planting of trees and shrubs, and the making and maintenance of a greensward.

The nature of the plantations upon a city lot or suburban place is such that the main part of the cultivation must necessarily be done before the plantations are made. The soil should be thoroughly pulverized, brought to a general grade, and the surface smoothed and raked with a steel-tooth rake. If a lawn is to be made, the grass seed should be sown immediately after the raking, and then the surface thoroughly compacted by the use of a heavy lawn roller. Fertilizers for the lawn should be free from weed seed and be of a lasting nature. If the soil is heavy it can be improved by plowing in a crop of cowpeas or Canada field peas. If this can not be done, the next best plan is to use thoroughly composted or sterilized stable manure. If the soil is naturally light its store of plant food can be augmented with bone meal. This should not be plowed under, but harrowed in at the time of preparing the soil.

The critical period in the life of a plant is when it is transplanted from the nursery to its permanent location. In moving trees from the nursery a portion of the root area is lost, and the top should be reduced in proportion to the loss of root area, in order that the newly transplanted and unestablished plant may be able to secure sufficient moisture and food to supply the demands of the top. The roots should also be pruned, so as to protect them against decay, by cutting away all broken and mutilated parts, leaving the cut surfaces smooth and in such position that they will come in contact with the fresh earth. After the plant becomes established certain branches will grow more rapidly than others and the appearance of the plant will be spoiled by this unequal growth. Pruning should, therefore, be resorted to in order to preserve a symmetrical development of the plant without rendering it artificial or formal in appearance. Care should also be exercised during the early development of a plant to maintain a uniform distribution of branches around the central axis, if it be a tree, so as to insure a symmetrical and pleasing form at maturity.

At planting time the excavation prepared for the reception of the tree should be of sufficient depth to allow it to be set as deep as it stood in the nursery and large enough to accommodate the roots without bending them, while the earth in the bottom of the hole should be loosened at least one spade length below the general floor of the hole. In replacing the soil over the roots of the plant, a thin layer of earth should be placed immediately in contact with the roots and thoroughly pressed down by trampling in order to bring the particles of soil in close contact with the feeding roots of the plant. The hole should then be filled and the surface left slightly above the general surface of the surrounding ground.

The bays of curved walks and drives should be filled with groups of shrubs, so that if there be no natural object for the road to make a curve around, the plantation will serve as a substitute for one, and in so doing produce one of the highest effects which can be secured in landscape gardening. By a judicious use of plants in the bays of walks and drives new and unexpected features in the form of vistas, lawn pieces, or specimen plants can be brought before the observer, thus producing pleasant surprises and holding his interest. The plantations show variety as well as serve the purpose of marking the walk.

The Reasons For Buying and Using Fertilizers

The Permanent Building Up of the Soil is the Most Important Reason—A West Virginia Authority, Who is Helping Solve the Soil Problem of That State, Tells How This May Be Brought About—Some Important Fertilizer Facts.

The most fertile soils become unproductive when crops are grown continuously and removed from the land. Such exhaustion can be prevented only by returning to the soil the elements of fertility taken off in the crops. During the past year the farmers of West Virginia have used 46,010 tons of fertilizer, at a cost of over $1,000,000, in an effort to maintain or increase the fertility of the soils of the state. Two questions arise: 1. Has this money been invested to the best advantage? 2. May we expect profitable returns from a still larger use of fertilizers?

A study of the records of fertilizer sales shows that several thousand tons of the fertilizers used were of very low grade. By low grade fertilizers we mean fertilizers containing only small amounts of plant food materials, often in very unavailable forms. It costs as much to mix, bag, ship, and apply a ton of fertilizer containing garbage tankage as it does one containing nitrate of soda, but garbage tankage may be of very doubtful fertilizing value. To get the most fertilizing value per dollar invested we must use high grade materials.

One fact stands out prominently in the fertilizer sales record for last year. Over one-half of the fertilizer used in this state was acid phosphate. The use of so large a proportion of phosphate fertilizer may be taken to indicate two things: first, that farmers are realizing more than ever the advisability of securing their nitrogen by growing legumes and taking proper care of the manure; and second, that they find it more profitable to insure a supply of available potash by maintaining the content of organic matter in the soil than by purchasing it in the form of fertilizer.

The growth of plants, like that of animals, requires a supply of certain food materials. Plants obtain a part of their food from the air and the remainder from the soil. Since the composition of the air changes but little, differences in productivity may be attributed to differences in the supply of those food materials which the plant obtains from the soil. Careful investigations have shown that those substances which may become exhausted in a soil to such an extent as to limit crop growth are five in number. They are limestone, organic matter, nitrogen, potash, and phosphoric acid. Lack of drainage, improper cultivation, and poor seed also contribute to low crop yields.

The principal value of lime in a soil arises from its ability to keep the soil sweet. It does this by neutralizing the acids which are being continually formed through the decay of organic matter and the decomposition of soil minerals.

Long before man attempted to grow crops artificially Nature had solved the problem of soil conservation and soil improvement. By Nature's system the crops that grow each year are returned to the soil. Here they decay, liberating the plant food which they contain and stocking the soil with organic matter. This process accounts for the high productivity of virgin soils.

Organic matter furnishes food for bacteria. These bacteria render available the plant food contained in the plant residues and incidentally hasten the liberation of plant food from soil minerals. Organic matter exerts a marked influence on the physical nature of soils. It loosens the texture of clay soils, makes better drainage and aeration possible, prevents clodding, and renders them more easily worked. It improves the water-holding capacity of sandy soils, making them less subject to drought, and increases their ability to retain readily available forms of plant food.

Organic matter cannot be purchased economically. We can increase the organic matter in the soil by raising crops and returning to the land the crops themselves or the manure produced when they are fed. Greater effort should be made to have more vegetable matter to plow under. Corn stubble, corn stalks, weeds, cover crops of rye or crimson clover, when added to the soil, make it more productive.

All plants require nitrogen for their growth. There is more nitrogen contained in the air over an acre of land than would be required to grow a million crops of corn. Unfortunately this nitrogen is not in a form available to plants. Crops must get their nitrogen from the soil in other forms.

The growing of legumes is the most economical method of increasing the amount of nitrogen in the soil.

Most soils contain enough potash to produce maximum crops for hundreds of years. However, most of this potash is locked up in insoluble soil minerals, only a small amount being available at any one time for the growth of plants. The rate at which the potash becomes available in a soil may be increased by supplying a large amount of decaying organic matter. The larger part of the potash used by plants is found in the stalks. Hence, if the manure produced by feeding the straw, stover, and hay is returned to the soil, there is but slight loss of potash.

Phosphoric acid may well be called the keystone of soil fertility in this state. The use of phosphoric acid has produced a large increase at our Agricultural Experiment Station. Experiments also indicate that it is doubtful whether nitrogen or potash can be applied with profit on most soils unless used in connection with phosphoric acid.

Complete fertilizers are mixtures containing nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash mixtures. Large numbers of such mixtures are on the market. The principal danger in buying complete fertilizers lies in the possibility of the nitrogen being present in forms of low availability such as garbage tankage or leather meal. In West Virginia, fertilizer tags must state the ingredients supplying the nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash in a fertilizer. The phosphoric acid and potash in a complete fertilizer is as valuable as any, but it may not be safe to pay much over the value of these two for such a fertilizer. Thus, a 1-8-2 fertilizer, meaning one containing 1% of nitrogen, 8% of available phosphoric acid and 2% of potash, may be worth but little more than an 8-2 alone. A high grade complete fertilizer, such as a 3-8-6 or a 4-10-4, can often be used at a profit on thin land or on crops of high market value per acre.

Mark the laying hen. Any hen can lay in the spring but the one which lays through winter when eggs are high is the one which deserves recognition by promotion to the breeding flock.

Everything is to be gained and nothing lost by selecting breeding hens during winter. It is easy to select the laying hen. Her comb is bright and red and her pin bones will be spread apart. Hens meeting these qualifications should be set apart with a good, vigorous male bird. It is folly to breed from the entire flock. By selecting a few of the best birds, progress will be made. Where no selection is practiced, the poor producers will be used for breeding, for even loafers will lay in the spring. It is also a mistake to breed from the immature and undersized stock. Over-fat, coarse-boned hens or those which drop behind should never be put in the breeding pen. The best place for them is on the table. Pick out the good birds and note the improvement. Use fewer males so that you can afford better stock.

CURING MEAT.

Dry Salting and Sugar Cure.

At the "short course" held under the auspices of the Washington State college at North Yakima recently, Professor Thornber gave suggestions on curing meat on the farm.

Dry salting is best for hot weather for preserving small pieces of meat without smoking. Use 16 pounds of salt, 4 pounds sugar, 6 ounces of saltpeter per 100 pounds of meat. Rub this into the meat every day for a week, afterward once a week. After each rubbing cover the meat with the salt mixture. Two weeks should be enough for bacon, five or six weeks for hams.

As to the sugar cure let the meat cool a day, then rub a mixture of one part brown sugar to four parts salt into it. Let it lie a day. Then pack into a barrel and weight the meat down. Make a brine of 16 pounds of fine dairy salt, four pounds sugar or molasses, and, if you wish, six ounces of saltpeter per 100 pounds of meat.

Put enough water into this to float an egg. Pour the brine into the barrel. In two weeks the smaller pieces will be ready. The larger ones take five or six weeks. Hang the meat in the smoke-house and build a fire under it. Use apple wood, juniper or corncobs for smoking. After a week take out and hang up. Do not let any water touch the meat after it is smoked.

Sweet peas may be planted in pots or boxes and will give early flowers.

LARGE ROAD MILEAGE BUILT UNDER FEDERAL SUPERVISION

Nearly five million square yards of roadway, the equivalent of 561.9 miles of road 15 feet wide, were constructed under the supervision of Federal road specialists during the last fiscal year, according to the report of the Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. This is more than double the mileage so constructed in previous years. The roads constructed under supervision of the office include experimental roads, post roads, county roads, and roads in National Parks and forests.

The office made studies and recommendations for improving the complete road systems of 32 counties in a number of States, assigned engineers to inspect specific roads and advise as to their treatment in 113 communities, and specially assigned 7 engineers to assist State departments of roads and other State agencies dealing with roads and road materials.

The demonstration maintenance work undertaken in 1914 on a through route from Washington to Atlanta was continued during the year, the mileage under supervision increasing from 724 to 876. The cumulative effect of continuous maintenance, says the report, has been demonstrated by the fact that from March 15 to June 30, 1916, the road was not closed to traffic at any point.

In the National parks and National forests the office supervised construction on approximately 170 miles of road, of which about 70 miles were completed. One of the roads under construction — the Escalante-Winder road in the Powell National Forest, Utah—will open up communication with a settlement in the valley of the upper Colorado River, which has heretofore been practically cut off from the rest of the world.

The following is the apportionment of the $5,000,000 of Federal road funds available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

This is the first installment of Federal moneys to be apportioned to the States under the Federal Aid Road Act approved July 11, 1916. Before making the division among the States, the Secretary, in accordance with the Act, deducted 2 per cent or $150,000 needed for administering its provisions. This left $4,850,000 to be apportioned among the States, one-third in the ratio of area, one-third in the ratio of population, and one-third in the ratio of mileage of rural delivery routes and star routes. The apportionment on this basis gives the following amounts for the several States:

Arizona	68,513.52
Arkansas	82,689.10
California	151,063.92
Colorado	83,690.14

Rhode Island	11,665.71
South Carolina	71,807.64
South Dakota	80,946.02
Tennessee	114,153.48
Texas	291,927.81
Utah	56,950.15
Vermont	22,844.47
Virginia	99,660.71
Washington	71,884.28
West Virginia	53,270.46
Wisconsin	128,361.07
Wyoming	61,196.82
Total	$4,850,000.00

The apportionment indicated above is only of one year's funds. For succeeding fiscal years the act appropriates the following amounts:

1918	$10,000,000
1920	20,000,000
1921	25,000,000

The apportionment as given above does not take into consideration the $1,000,000 additional appropriated each year for ten years for the development of rural roads in the National Forests.

ALFALFA LAND.

Where land in the East is plowed in the spring for alfalfa, at least four to six weeks should intervene between the time of plowing and seeding, during which time the land should be harrowed every 10 or 12 days to keep down the weeds and to conserve the moisture. Where the soil is inclined to be too loose or when there are any clods, the roller pulverizer is an excellent tool to use.

GRAPES.

KILLING WOOLLY APHIS.

Experiments in the use of poisonous gases against the woolly apple aphis indicate that carbon bisulphid may with good results be applied to the roots by injection or in water poured around the roots. Experiments in the control of the woolly aphis on the roots of nursery apple stock by the use of poisonous gases indicate that while the use of carbon bisulphid is impracticable under nursery conditions, para-dichlorobenzene offers promise against this pest.

Good care, clean food, and regular attendance are necessary to good egg production.

HAVE AN "OLD-FASHIONED" GARDEN.

If you wish to grow flowers in quantities for house decoration, or other purposes, grow them in a border three or four feet wide along a back fence. This is the place for larkspurs, hollyhocks, dahlias, columbines, phlox, Shasta daisies, gladioli, etc. Call this an "old-fashioned" garden, if you will; all the same, everybody likes it.

The artificial incubation of eggs dates back to the early Egyptians who used ovens heated with fermenting manure

HERE'S WHERE YOU CAN MAKE MONEY.

When your implements are brought in from the field inspect them very carefully and note all repairs needed on a tag and tie it on the implement. Carefully clean and oil all bearings and look over wooden parts. If the paint is becoming worn, put on a new coat to prevent the wood from shrinking or swelling. Place the machine under shelter and remove the tag when all repairs have been made in first-class condition.

The oyster can hold up a weight of forty pounds before its shell will open.

WEATHER BEAREAU WARNINGS.

The summer seasons of 1913 and 1914 were characterized by almost the complete absence of destructive tropical hurricanes which generally frequent the waters of the Caribbean Sea and Gulf regions. In 1915, however, two severe storms passed over this region, and the observations and reports obtained from its stations enabled the U. S. Weather Bureau to give timely warnings of the occurrence and progress of these destructive storms, resulting, it is believed, in great saving of life and property.

Cold makes animals uncomfortable more quickly than heat.

A Hotbed Helps

A hotbed is a box covered with glass and heated by artificial means. Ordinarily fresh horse manure is the most available and best supply of heat for this purpose to be found on the average farm. After a hotbed is planted, it needs to be carefully ventilated and watered to provide proper conditions for germinating the seed, and it also needs to be carefully watched on account of the danger of damping-off, if it becomes too wet and is not ventilated enough. Also poor ventilation will cause weak, spindling plants. Before removing plants from the hotbed, they must become accustomed to the same conditions they will have to meet in the field. This is called "hardening off." It is done by withholding water and increasing the ventilation for about two weeks, until the covers may be left off the bed entirely—all night as well as in the daytime. When the plants will stand this treatment without danger, they may be safely put in the field.

To Fatten the Calf

Prize to Thirteen-Year-Old-Boy.

In Iowa's baby beef feeding contest, in which more than 1100 boys and girls were enrolled, Clement Rowe, 13 years old, of Glenwood, Mills county, was pronounced winner and state-wide champion. The contest was conducted by the Iowa Beef Producers' association in co-operation with the agricultural extension department at Ames. A $100 trip to Washington or a trophy of the same value, donated by the Union Stock Yards and Transit company of Chicago, was Rowe's reward.

COLD STORAGE EGGS.

Because fewer eggs are produced in the most populous regions of the country than are consumed there, and because the seasons have a marked effect on the number of eggs laid, city housewives must use cold storage eggs during some periods of the year if they are to supply their tables at all with this food. The fact that eggs have been held in cold storage does not necessarily mean that they are of low quality. Carefully handled cold storage eggs often are of better quality than fresh local eggs that have been improperly cared for.

ANTIMONY.

Antimony ore production in the United States in 1915 is estimated at about 5,000 tons, containing 2,000 tons of antimony, valued at about $325,000. The largest previous domestic output was 150 tons of metal and 380 tons of ore carrying 55 per cent of antimony in 1892.

One Cent a Word is all that it will cost you to Rent that vacant room or empty house. ONE CENT A WORD.

Cultivating Vacant Lots

A great National wave of "Plant Vacant Lots," "Plant the Fence Corners," "Plant the Parks and Lawns" and "Plant Every Inch of Space Available" to break the high food cost of today and the shortage that is bound to come when any country is at war.

In Cleveland they are talking of planting the beautiful lawns of Shaker Heights.

Governor Goodrich has started an organization in the State of Indiana composed of the Mayors of all the cities to further advance this great movement.

Our own Mayor Hosey is heartily in favor or this movement and just a couple of days ago made the suggestion that our many vacant lost in the subdivisions of our city should be cultivated.

In line with our honorable Mayor's suggestion the Wildwood Companies offer to the public our many lots located in all parts of the city for cultivating the much needed vegetables.

The location and further details of our plan may be had by calling at our office on West Berry St., or phoning 2147 or 2167.

Wholesale Markets Have Unusually Light Receipts—Hay Up.

Wheat advanced 4 cents more on its way to $2.50 or $3.00, whichever the case may be, and flour followed with a rise of 20 cents on the barrel. The outlook for further advances is very bright, in fact much brighter than the majority of the people like to see. In the larger markets the grain rose 7 cents Saturday morning.

Hay also added $1 at the close of the week, light receipts seeming to be the cause. Only four loads were received during the day. Throughout the wholesale markets business was very dull, due to the fact that farmers are busy just now with the beginning of cultivation. Business is expected to be slow for several days now. No corn nor oats were offered Saturday.

CHICAGO GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

Chicago, April 14.—Wheat jumped today to new high price levels. Shorts who tried to cover found the market bare of offerings and were forced to raise bids with stunning swiftness. Opening quotations, which ranged from ½c to 3c higher, with May at $2.23½ to $2.24, and July at $1.89 to $1.89¾, were followed by a general step upward on which May touched $2.25¾.

The close, nevertheless, was firm at 1¾c to 4c net advance, with May at $2.24½ to $2.25, and July at $1.91½ to $1.92.

Corn, like wheat, ascended to new top records. After opening unchanged to 1¼c up, the market scored decided gains all around. The close was unsettled at gains of 1c to 1⅞c net.

Strength of grain rallied provisions.

The famous Roman Bath on board the Vaterland in which the government may stable mules for transport to Europe. The bath is of marble and was built at enormous expense.

(BY F. M. KERBY.)

New York, April 13.—There is a possibility today that the Vaterland, the largest ship in the world, seized from Germany by the United States, will sail with the first detachment of American expeditionary troops for the battle line in France and with a consignment of mules stabled in the famous Roman bath of the ship, which cost thousands of dollars to install.

There is also a possibility that the Amerika, the Kaiser Wilhelm II, the Grosser Kurfurst, the Frederick der Grosse and the rest of the 91 interned German vessels seized by the United States will soon sail for Europe with shells, food and supplies of all kinds for the allies.

Collector of Port Malone expected to find the engines of all smashed beyond repair, but it is now believed most of them can be placed in good shape within a few weeks and expert workmen are being recruited to fix them.

The 91 German vessels seized have a gross tonnage of 594,696, and Austrian vessels seized have tonnage of 25,027, a total of 619,723. None of the Austrian ships have been tampered with.

If placed in trans-Atlantic service, these vessels will wipe out two-thirds of all damage done by German U-boats to allied and neutral shipping since they began the "mad dog" submarine campaign, February 1.

During February, according to figures from the British admiralty and other sources, 456,326 tons of shipping were sunk.

Up to March 27, approximately 426,000 tons were sunk during the month of March, a total of 876,817 tons.

If Uncle Sam decides to put the Teutonic vessels into commission, 619,723 tons of this can be almost instantly replaced.

Within six months, at the latest, even those vessels badly damaged can be replaced, and the whole can be placed in service.

The question whether these vessels shall be used by the United States depends upon the state department's interpretation of the treaty of 1828, which Secretary Lansing has already said Germany has broken.

It is likely the vessels will be turned over to the United States shipping board, and such of them as the navy desires assigned to service.

The remainder can be placed in merchant service to the allied countries, wiping out at one swoop all the submarine damage caused by the Germans in a month and a half.

If the German U-boats sink these vessels while they are being used by the United States government the liability of the government for payment to the owners would of course cease. The Germans would simply be destroying their own property.

THE DAY ON WALL STREET.

New York, April 14.—Speculative issues, notably sugars, oils, shippings and other semi-war descriptions, were the strong features of today's market, with more moderate strength in munitions and equipments. Cuban-American Sugar was conspicuous for its eleven-point gain, this being counterbalanced by a break of nine and one-half in People's Gas on the cut in the dividend. Other gas shares fell in sympathy. Consolidated Gas losing over three points. U. S. Steel made an extreme advance of one and one-quarter points, with one to two for General Electric, U. S. Rubber, Goodrich and Wilson Packing. Rails and Coppers were neglected. The closing was strong. Sales were estimated at 250,000 shares. Bonds were irregular.
